CHASE COUNTY.

LOCATION AND NATURAL FEATURES.

CHASE County, named after Salmon P. Chase, who was United States Senator from, and Governor of, Ohio, and Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, was organized in 1859. It was south and west of the center of population of Kansas in 1875, and in 1880 this center had moved some distance west of it. The northern boundary of the county is 102 miles south of the Nebraska line; its eastern line, 96 miles from the State of Missouri; its southern boundary, 75 miles from the Indian Territory; and its western boundary, 285 miles from the State of Colorado. Between it and Missouri there are four counties; there are six organized counties on the line west of it. Its area is about 750 square miles. The Cottonwood River flows through the county in a general northeasterly and easterly direction, emptying into the Neosho, in Lyon County. The valley of this river ranges from one to three miles in width; its soil is chiefly a dark friable loam, varying from five to twenty-five feet deep, the accumulation of the decayed vegetation of ages. The river has high steep banks, and it has a fall of from five to eight feet in every half a dozen miles, thus making a series of good water-powers.

The limits of the river valley are most clearly defined by lines of bluffs or low and rounded sloping hills on either side, out of which crop ledges of magnesian limestone. The land is very rolling above the line of bluffs, and in many places it is broken by the ledges of stone that come out to the surface. Lying between the hills are swells of greater or less dimensions, that possess the elements of great fertility. The Cottonwood has numerous tributaries; the principal streams flowing into it from the north being French, Silver, Middle, Diamond, Fox, Peyton and Buckeye, the general course of which is southeast; from the south, are Jacobs, Bloody, South Fork, Rock, Spring, Corn Branch, Coon and Cedar, whose general course is north. The head-waters of the Verdigris are in the southeastern part of the county; the stream runs southeasterly into Lyon and Greenwood and empties into the Neosho. In the northeast part of the county is Canola Creek; it passes through the southeast corner of Marion and empties into the Neosho, in the southwest corner of Lyon County. There are branches of all these tributaries fed by abounding springs of living water, and this network of running waters, great and small, give to this county the justly earned reputation of being one of the finest watered portions of the State of Kansas. These branches of the Cottonwood possess rich, fertile valleys, varying from half a mile to a mile in width. The valleys are mostly on the west and north side of the streams; on the south and east the land usually rises abruptly to a summit, then gradually descends southwardly and eastwardly to the adjacent valley and stream. About 15 per cent of the county is valley land; 50 per cent, good tillable, undulating prairie, and 35 per cent of a bluffy character. Good well water can be obtained at a depth of about twenty-five feet.

The streams are well skirted with timber, but the average width of the belt is less than one half a mile; the forest land of the county is estimated at 5 per cent. Cottonwood, hackberry, sycamore, hickory, walnut, and burr oak are the prevailing kinds of timber.

The soil is generally quite strongly impregnated with lime; the subsoil is of a clayish cast, but in the western part of the county, there is a smaller percentage of lime in the soil, and the subsoil is more porous. Building stone exists in great quantities, and it is of a most excellent quality. The west of the State house is built of it. It is seen in the public and private buildings at Leavenworth, Kansas City and in many of the principal towns along the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad and its branches. Good brick clay is found in the valley of the Cottonwood. The grasses growing from this soil are superior in their qualities for fattening stock, and the sheltered sides of the bluffs, the nooks at the head of the valleys, with the abounding timber, with artificial shelters, make this a peculiarly good county for the raising and fattening of cattle.

There is comparatively no stagnant water in the county, nor swampy lands, and with the high altitude of the country, there is a great freedom from malaria. The winters are usually short, the spring opens early, and the autumn days are balmy, breathing an atmosphere of great purity with healing in its wings.

TOWNSHIP HISTORY.

March 24, 1860, Toledo and Diamond Creek townships were created, and the 750 square miles of Chase County are comprised in five municipal townships. Diamond Creek is in the northwest part of the county, Falls, in the north central; Toledo, in the northeast and eastern; Bazaar, in the southeast and south central: Cottonwood, in the southwestern. The two cities in the county are in Falls Township, Cottonwood Falls and Strong City. The County Commissioners' districts are as follows: First district, Toledo and Bazaar; Second, Falls; Third, Cottonwood and Diamond Creek.

Toledo.—The area of this township is 138 square miles. Safford and Elinor, stations on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, are its principal villages. Safford is two miles from the Lyon County line, and Elinor is three miles west of Safford. J. F. Gill is the station agent and

L. P. Ravenscroft is the physician at Safford. It is located on the northeast quarter of Section 15, Township 19, Range 9. It contained 537,100 acres January 5, 1875. In June, 1856, Nathan Cory, Daniel Holsinger and Gabriel Jacobs settled in the township. Mr. Pine and Jane Wentworth of this township were married in 1857. George Holsinger was born in this township in 1857. O. Thompson started the first general store at Toledo. It was in 1859. John Buchanan was the first postmaster. The office was established in 1858.

In 1863, the Friends erected a house of worship, on the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of Section 2, Township 19, Range 9. Their church was organized in 1859. Schools were kept in private houses in this township; its first schoolhouse was built in 1864, school district No. 9. The town site of Toledo was abandoned January 2, 1865. Here is a general store, and a blacksmith shop and a physician.

Bazaar.—This township has an area of 178 square miles. Some families from Illinois settled here in 1857, among whom were Dr. M. R. Leonard, J. Lane and Barnard McCabe. The wife of Dr. Leonard died in 1859, and John Sharp of this township died in 1860. The first postmaster of Bazaar, in 1860, was George Leonard. Streckle & Co. started a general store in 1870. Its first school building was built of logs. It was erected in district No. 7, in 1860. The Methodists erected their first church building in 1864. Bazaar, Berley, Morgan and Thurman are country post-offices; Matfield Green has two general stores, a blacksmith shop, and a good water flouring-mill. Henry Brandley from this township, has been Representative, Senator, and Secretary of the State Senate.

Cottonwood.—This township contains 180 square miles. Homestead and Wonsevu are country post-offices, located in the limits. Cedar Point is situated one half mile south of Cedar Grove Station on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, which is the westernmost one in the county. At the Point there are two general stores, a blacksmith shop, and here Drinkwater & Schriver have one of the best water grist-mills in the county. The proprietors of Cedar Point are Orlo H. Drinkwater, Peter Schriver, A. B. Emerson, Henry Weaver, Philip Frank, Richard O'Neil, and Sumner L. Roberts. The location is on the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 6, Township 21, Range 6, and the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of Section 1, Township 21, Range 5.

J. W. Byrom is the station agent at Cedar Grove, and J. W. Cope is the agent at Crawfordsville, which is six miles east of Cedar Grove. Joseph L. Crawford laid out this place, February 25, 1882, on the northwest quarter of Section 23, Township 20, Range 6. This place has two stores, and it has absorbed what has been known as "Hunt's." M. Coyne settled in this township in 1857; the first birth here was December 25, 1857, Lafayette Hawkins. Mr. Fratchet opened a grocery store in 1859. O. H. Drinkwater was postmaster at Cedar Point in 1862; school district No. 3 was formed here in 1863, and the Methodist Episcopal Church, a house of worship in 1876.

Diamond Creek embraces Townships 18 and 19, of Ranges 6 and 7. Hymer, Woodhull, and Elk are country post-offices; at Elk is a blacksmith shop. Elmdale is located on a part of Section 27, Township 19, Range 7. Stephen M. Wood is President of the Town Company. He has been a Representative and Senator, and is now the President of the Board of Regents, of the State Agricultural College. A. Seaton is the station agent, and the hamlet is a neat little town containing a hotel, a drug store, a hardware store, three general stores, two blacksmith shops, a saw and grist-mill, a loan agent, a nice passenger depot, post-office, church and schoolhouse. The town is about four miles due west of Cottonwood Falls. The main street running east and west has a thrifty, beautiful appearance. In 1854, Seth Hayes, an Indian trader at Council Grove, located a stock ranch on the Cottonwood, near the mouth of Diamond Spring Creek. School district No. 1, was formed in this township in 1865; Samuel Beverlin, Probate Judge of the county, was postmaster at Middle Creek, now Elmdale, in 1866; William Jeffrey & Son opened a general store in 1872, at Elmdale.

Falls contains an area of 110 square miles. The towns are Cottonwood Falls and Strong, which are a little over one mile apart, and are the objective points of the county. James Fisher, a single man from Columbiana County, Ohio, was the first settler in the county. He located on the southwest quarter of Section 26, Township 19, Range 8, in 1855, and in 1873 was robbed and murdered at his own house, by Martin Goss. For the commission of this crime, Goss had a sentence to the penitentiary for twenty-one years. Susan Borders, the daughter of Christopher Borders, was born near Cottonwood Falls, in 1858. She was the first child born in the county. The family soon after moved into Missouri. In December, 1858, Sidney A. Breese settled in what became Cottonwood Falls; the oldest living settler. He was one of the county organizers, the first Assessor, Register of Deeds, and County Attorney of the county. He has been Clerk of the District Court, and he entered upon the duties of the office of County Clerk in January, 1870, and his seventh term closes in January, 1884. J. S. Doolittle has been County Commissioner, Clerk of the District Court, County Treasurer and Representative. J. B. Smith has been County Treasurer, Commissioner, Assessor and Probate Judge. A. P. Gandy has been County Treasurer, County Clerk, and Register of Deeds. A. S. Williams has been Commissioner and Sheriff. W. S. Romigh has been County Attorney, Surveyor and County Clerk. A. S. Snyder has been Assessor and County Commissioner. M. R. Leonard has been Clerk of the District Court, Representative and Senator. H. L. Hunt has been Commissioner and Senator. C. C. Whitson has been twelve years Probate Judge; Miss Mary E. Hunt, six years Superintendent of Public Instruction; Samuel Buchanan, four years County Treasurer. S. N. Wood has been Commissioner, Superintendent of Public Instruction, County Attorney, District Judge, Representative and Senator, Among the earliest settlers in Falls Township were James Fisher, Milton Ford and A. P. Wentworth, who came in 1857. C. S. Hills was the postmaster at Cottonwood Falls, in 1858; L. D. Hinckley opened a grocery store here in 1859; school district No. 6 was organized here in 1862; the Congregational Church in 1870; the Methodist Episcopal, in 1871. The mention made of county officers in connection with the history of this township, has been because of their necessary residence therein. As a matter of fact, since 1872, there has not been a county warrant, township order or bond of any kind that was not paid at maturity.

The receipts from the magnificent stone quarries of Falls Township are rapidly increasing from year to year. There is no county in Kansas where the wealth per capita is greater than in Chase County. J. S. Shipman, the proprietor of the Osage mill, which is situated on the Cottonwood, near Elmdale, who manufactures the "Wife's Choice," and "Gilt Edge," brands of flour, and entered upon his second term as County Treasurer in October, 1882, has twenty-two persons upon his Treasurer's bond, among whom are a dozen names good for over $1,000,000. Chase County has a good climate, a good soil, a good range, excellent public buildings, and an active, cultured and progressive people.

WAR RECORD.

Probably no county in the United States of America could show that 27 per cent of its voting population enlisted in 1861, except this one of Chase. Here were seventy volunteers out of a body of 262 voters. In Company I, of the second Kansas Infantry, Samuel N. Wood was mustered in as Captain June 20, 1861, and was afterwards transferred to Fremont's Battalion. COUNTY ORGANIZATION AND ELECTIONS.

Chase County was established by an act of the Territorial Legislature of 1859, which was approved by Governor Medary, February 11. Its territory was taken from the counties of Wise and Butler; the township line between Townships 17 and 18 was made the south boundary of Wise; that between Townships 21 and 22 the north boundary of Butler.

Wise and Butler were formed by the Territorial Legislature of 1855, and the name of Wise was changed to Morris by an act of the Legislature of 1859. The Legislature of 1860 made the eastern boundary of Chase and Butler counties the range line between 9 and 10. The State Legislature of 1864 provided for the taking off of Township 22 in Ranges 6, 7, 8 and 9 from Butler and making it the southern portion of Chase. In 1873 eighteen sections were taken off of the east side of Townships 20, 21 and 22, Range 5, and made a part of Chase. Governor Samuel J. Crawford appointed J. M. Pherson, Sidney A. Breese and Frank Leonard as a Board of Supervisors to organize Chase County, and on March 15, 1859, the Board met and elected Charles S. Hills as Clerk. It also divided the county into three municipal townships: Falls in the northeast part of the county; Bazaar, in the southeast; Cottonwood, in the west. The voting places in Falls Township were established at the houses of S. A. Breese and Milton Ford; in Bazaar, at the house of Josiah Leonard; in Cottonwood, at the houses of Levin Daimes and Mr. Boggs. The election was held on March 26, and the whole number of votes polled was seventy-two.

Lambdin was chosen Councilman. In the Territorial House of 1861, S. N. Wood was the Representative, and in the State Legislature of 1861, he was Senator. In the Legislature of 1862, M. R. Leonard of Chase and C. Columbia of Morris were elected Representatives from the Thirteenth District. Under the first State appointment the counties of Butler, Chase and Morris constituted respectively the Sixty-seventh, Sixty-eighth and Sixty-ninth Representative Districts, and Fifteenth Senatorial District. He had 347 less votes than Frank Doster in Marion.

The Ninth District had taken from it the county of Butler, which was made a part of the Thirteenth, and the new counties of Harvey, Reno and Rice were made a part of the Ninth Judicial District. Judge Brown in 1874 was elected Member of Congress from the Third Congressional District, and Samuel R. Peters of Marion in 1875 was appointed Judge to fill the vacancy. In 1875 Judge Peters was elected without opposition, and again in 1879; the counties of Barton, Rush, Pawnee, Stafford, Edwards, Ford, Pratt, Kingman and Barbour being the newly organized counties of the district, making then fourteen counties in all. In 1881 the district was re-organized, the counties of Chase, Marion, Harvey, Reno, Rice, Kingman and Harper remaining in it. The terms of court in Chase County commenced on the fourth Tuesday in May and the first Tuesday in December.

COUNTY BUILDINGS AND GRANGES.

April 3, 1863, the county purchased of George W. Williams, a log-house and a lot for a court house for $175. It is situated northwest of the present court house, and its present existence in its primitive condition is an illustrative example of a county "living within its means." Terms of the District Court were held for a considerable time in the Congregational Church.

The voters of Chase County on May 23, 1871, gave 235 votes for public buildings; 107 against. Bonds to the amount of $40,000 were voted for public buildings on August 16, 1871, by a vote of 301 to 234. September 5, 1871, Isaac Alexander donated the west one-half of Block 28, and the east one-half of Block 29, comprising with the street between, about two and one-half acres for court house and jail purposes, whenever Cottonwood Falls was incorporated and could convey to the County of Chase. The Public Square was donated for school purposes. The town became a city of the third class in 1872. Its first Mayor was W. S. Smith; M. C. Newton, City Clerk; C. C. Whitson, Marshal; J. S. Doolittle, Police Judge; George W. Williams and A. S. Howard, were among its Councilmen.

The court house bonds were sold October 1, 1871, at a discount of 12 per cent, and on October 28, a contract was entered into with James Bannan, of Leavenworth, to erect the structure for $36,245. It was finished November 13, 1873, and accepted by the County Commissioners at a cost of $42,599.88, certain additions having been made to it. The jail is on the south end of the building, and it is admirably fitted up for the convenience and safety of its prisoners, being furnished with the best of cells. The court house is one of the best in Kansas, it is built on the Renaissance style of architecture, of the period of Louis XIII. It is three stories high, with a basement and cupola. The jail is two stories high. John G. Haskell, of Lawrence, was the architect.

Diamond Grange, No. 432, organized August 21, 1873, was the first one in the county. William Jeffrey, Master; B. Jeffrey, Secretary. SCHOOL AND OTHER STATISTICS.

There are four teachers employed in the new schoolhouse, completed in 1882, at a cost of $10,000. This school has a high reputation throughout the State. The pupils number nearly 300. This site is one of the most sightly places in the town; objects here can be seen twenty miles distant. In 1867, there were nine schoolhouses in Chase County; in 1870, 18; in 1878, 35; in 1882, 45, and 53 school rooms. The school population is 2,140. The visitations of schools by the Superintendent in 1882, was 73. There are 44 School Districts in the county; three of which are joint with Lyon, one with Morris, and one with Marion. The average school levy is 9.95 mills on the dollar; the schoolhouse bonds voted in 1882, were $12,850; the total amount of bonds is $16,130. There were 10 teachers of grade one; 42 of grade two; 12 of grade three. There was one Normal graduate.

In 1859, the population of the county was 549; in 1860, 1,046; in 1870, 1,980; in 1875, 3,116; in 1880, 6,081.

The valuation of church property in the county is estimated at $15,000. The organizations are classified as follows: Roman Catholic, United Presbyterians, and Universalists, each one; Baptist, Congregationalist, and Christians, each two; Methodists, fourteen; Quakers, one.

The county management of Chase has been on a very economical basis. Its early County Officers worked without pay, and acting upon the admonition: "Despise not the day of small things," the early settlers preferred to labor under inconveniences, rather than to place themselves under burdensome taxation. The first tax levy was made November 11, 1859, and seven mills was levied for county, and three mills for school purposes. In 1859, the valuation of real estate was $45,725; of personal property, $25,811; total assessment, $71,536. In 1860, the assessment was as follows: real estate, $131,147; personal property, $43,187; town lots, $1,794.50; total, $176,078.40. In 1871, the assessment was $749,457; in 1882, it was $1,822,860.90, of which $289,400.90 was the assessment of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company.

Chase County's average yield of winter wheat per acre in 1882, was 24 bushels. William Wood, near Cottonwood Falls, had 24 acres that yielded 44 bushels per acre. Little May and Fultz are the preferred varieties. The spring wheat average was 16 bushels to the acre; corn, 40; oats, 45; rye, 18; flax, 10. It has 3,648 horses and mules; 19,500 head of cattle; 7,097 sheep; 5,047 swine, which are mostly of the Berkshire and Poland-China breeds. Here are six months of good grazing; the cost per head for grazing cattle for the season is $1.25. Prairie hay in stack $3 per ton. There is no herd law in force, and 75 per cent of the county is open range.

COTTONWOOD FALLS.

Cottonwood Falls, at the organization of Chase County, was made the temporary county seat. At the general election held November, 1862, North Cottonwood Falls received 74 votes; Poland, 26; Bazaar, 2; Cottonwood Valley, one vote. North Cottonwood Falls was located on the northeast quarter of Section 29, Township 19, Range 8. Its plat was filed for record January 29, 1861; its proprietors were S. D. Hinkley, J. M. Pherson and J. B. Smith. Its public square, which is in the site of its new, beautiful and spacious school building, contains nearly five acres, and its valuable and attractive court house, stands on the west half of block 28 and on the east half of 29. Cottonwood Falls, proper, was located on the southeast quarter of Section 29, Township 19, Range 8. The plat was filed for record July 25, 1860. Wood's Addition to Cottonwood Falls embraced the west half of the west half of Section 28, Township 19, Range 8. The plat was recorded September 23, 1872. September 19, 1870, J. W. McWilliams and F. B. Hunt recorded an addition to the town, which was located on the west half of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 33, Township 19, Range 8.

The business of the city is done in what is technically North Cottonwood Falls. In reaching this place by rail travelers stop at Strong City, where there is a conveyance in readiness to take them to the Union House, at the Falls, which is located but a little distance from the Cottonwood, on the west side of Broadway, the main street. This street runs directly south to its termination at the court house ground. At the right of the bridge, on the south side of the Cottonwood River, is an excellent water-mill, and the music of the falling waters as they flow over the dam, added to the romantic appearance of the country and the attractions created by art, make the scene at once joyous, impressive and suggestive. D. C. Webb, the merchant prince of Strong City, has his business elaborately lettered by an advertisement on the roof of the mill.

A. S. Perrigo is the postmaster.

The Chase County National Bank was organized June, 1882, and began business August 28, 1882. Its capital is $50,000. The officers are: President, A. S. Howard; Vice-President, J. D. Minick; Cashier, W. W. Sanders. Directors, Arch. Miller, C. W. Rogler, William Jeffrey, J. D. Minick, F. Bernard, Samuel Baker, J. R. Blackshire, A. J. Crocker, A. S. Howard. A new stone bank building was completed during 1882, at a cost of $9,000, and occupied by the bank January 1, 1883.

The Congregationalists have a neat frame building, at the southeastern terminus of Broadway. It was built in 1870 at a cost of about $1,800. S. N. Wood, S. H. Perrigo and W. R. Brown were among the pioneers in this church work. Its first pastor was Rev. H. S. Brundage. Since then J. G. Freeborn, Harvey Jones and W. B. Fisher have ministered to the church. A. J. Crocker and H. N. Simmons are the deacons. It has about 50 members in its Sunday-school, and the church membership is about the same.

The Methodist Episcopal Church erected a building in 1870, at a cost of about $2,500. This church organized June 12, 1859, with seven members, J. C. Fraker, pastor.

The United Presbyterians are now building a stone structure, northwest of the court house, which will be an ornament to the city. They organized in 1872.

There are a few Universalists and Spiritualists here, and some of other Christian denominations.

The Press.—S. N. Wood commenced the publication of the Kansas Press, a four page, six column paper, at Cottonwood Falls, May 30, 1859. It was removed to Council Grove, Morris County, in October, 1859, and afterwards the material was taken to Salina.

In the summer of 1866, S. N. Wood started the Chase County Banner and ran it until August 3, 1867, when Theodore Alvord managed it until November, 1868. Mr. Wood continued its publication until the spring of 1859, when some of the business men of Cottonwood Falls purchased it, and W. R. Brown and H. L. Hunt were its editors until April, 1870, and F. E. Smith was publisher. It was then discontinued and its material was taken to Winfield, Cowley County.

In the summer of 1870, Frank J. Beck, Albert Follett and R. J. McClure began the publication of the Kansas Central Index, but soon after John Gifford and Albert Yale obtained it, and in January, 1871, they removed it to Wichita. The above named papers were all Republican in politics.

William A. Morgan established the Chase County Leader, at Cottonwood Falls, February 6, 1871. It is a financial success and is well sustained by the Republicans of the county. The office is well located, being on the corner just north of the Chase County National Banking Association, which was erected in 1882, on corner of Broadway and Friend Street, one of the nicest two-story buildings in the city. Both buildings are of the Cottonwood magnesian limestone.

The Chase County Courant was established at Cottonwood Falls October 26, 1874, by J. C. Martin and W. E. Timmons. Sept. 1, 1876, W. E. Timmons assumed editorial control, and J. C. Martin became local editor. April 13, 1877, Martin again became associate editor with Timmons. May 15, 1878, Martin sold his interest in the paper to A. J. Crutchfield and Timmons again became sole editor. July 13,1878, Crutchfield retired, leaving Timmons editor and proprietor. The Courant is Democratic in politics, having been Independent up to the retirement of Mr. Martin from it. It is a six-column folio, and Mr. Timmons acts as editor, compositor, "devil," bookkeeper, business manager, etc., getting out the paper entirely alone, except on press day when he gets some one to turn the machine—a Taylor press—while he feeds in the papers. This is the only paper of the same size in the State, or perhaps in the United States, that is gotten out by one man unaided, except about one hour each week, while the paper is being run off.

Two real estate papers have been temporarily published at Cottonwood Falls.

STRONG CITY.

Strong City was organized by the Cottonwood Town Company, D. L. Lakin, President, and Edward Wilder, Secretary, February 29, 1872. It is located on the east one-half of the southeast quarter of Section 17, Township 19, Range 8, and the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of Section 17, Township 19, Range 8. Emslie's addition to Cottonwood was made May 9, 1879. Hon. David K. Cartter, John Emslie, E. A. Hildebrand, George O. Hildebrand and Richard Hoffman were the parties in interest. This addition was located north of the right of way of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, on the east one-half of the southeast quarter of Section 17, Township 19, Range 8, and on the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 16, Township 19, Range 8. The railroad company completed their line of railroad through the county in the spring of 1872. The county was fortunate in securing it without aiding it with railroad bonds. Cottonwood station, now Strong, is the objective railroad point in the county. Cottonwood Falls, the county-seat, had expected to be a main station on the road, but for certain reasons the road was directed from there for more than a mile to the northward, and Strong is a prosperous and rapidly growing city. In all directions around it are inexhaustible quarries of the best of building stone. Here are stone-crushers and stone-sawing establishments that furnish employment to hundreds of men. Here is one of the largest and most metropolitan structures in Central Kansas. It contains a bank, a city hall and D. C. Webb's famous store. S. F. Jones is President and E. A. Hildebrand is Cashier of the Strong City bank, which has a capital of $100,000. The town has three general stores, three groceries, an extensive hardware store, a druggist, two physicians, two attorneys, two shoemakers, a livery, feed and sale stable, a milliner, a blacksmith, an auctioneer, a drayman, a carpenter and builder, a meat market, a well-driller, a tobacconist, keeper of a hotel and a restaurant. The town has the second best school building in the county, an excellent stone structure of ample proportions. There are in 1882 two teachers employed. He located a claim, August 12, on the Cottonwood River in Cottonwood Township—then Wise County now Chase—and left it in charge of friends while he returned to Indianola and closed out his mercantile business in which he had been engaged since April. In April, 1858, he settled on his claim, built a log cabin and began to make improvements. He has added to his farm by subsequent purchases so that it contains 545 acres. He also owns 160 acres situated on the Cottonwood River one mile east of the home farm. Has held the office of Treasurer of Cottonwood Township one term, and has held other local offices. One of the earliest settlers of Chase County, he has ever since remained upon his original location, and although he came here with limited means and has met with several reverses and lost considerable by fire upon two occasions, he has by the exercise of industry, frugality and good business principles placed himself upon a level with the most prominent farmers in Chase County. He has been twice married. His first wife was Miss Clara J. Young, of Cottonwood Township, whom he married May 12, 1867. After a sojourn of four weeks in Independence, Mo., the family moved into Kansas. On the last Sunday in July, 1854, they stopped to rest on the very ground where now stands the State University. From that elevated position no sign of human habitation could be seen except down near the river a few logs were laid up. The family decided that it must be a deserted Indian lodge; it proved to be the foundation of a house on a claim taken by a Missourian who had returned to his home in Missouri. Two weeks later the first company came from New England, bought out the Missouri settler and located the city of Lawrence. Three miles farther west, on the old California road, the father located a claim and commenced improving it. Many a weary, hungry claim hunter found rest and comfort in their hospitable home. Sarah, then seventeen years old, walked the three miles to the city of tents to attend divine services; heard Rev. S. Y. Lum preach the first sermon ever preached in the city of Lawrence. He came here a young man of nineteen years with no fortune but a strong, robust constitution and a willing heart and hand to take hold of any work by which he could make an honest living. He will be remembered by many old settlers as the cheery, hospitable landlord of the Cincinnati House of Lawrence. He was Orderly Sergeant in Company A, a volunteer company of "Border Ruffian" times. He was in the employ of the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company and United States Express Company several years prior to his death. He was express messenger on the L., L. & G. R. EDWARDS COUNTY.

EDWARDS County when created contained Township 23 of Ranges 19 and 20; Townships 24, 25 and 26, of Ranges 16, 17, 18, 19 and 20, aggregating seventeen Congressional Townships. Pawnee County was its northern boundary, and also lay east of its two northwestern townships. Stafford and Pratt were on the east; Kiowa on the south; Ford and Hodgeman on the west. The Legislature of 1875 enlarged its territory by taking the north one-half of Kiowa County, and making it the south part of Edwards County; the south one-half of Kiowa became the northern part of Comanche County. The present area of the county is twenty-seven Congressional Townships, embracing 972 square miles.

There is next to no timber in the county. The Arkansas River runs in a northeasterly direction near the northwestern part of the county. The head waters of the Little Coon and the Big Coon creeks are in Trenton and Jackson townships. The Little Coon enters the Big Coon about midway between Kinsley and Nettleton, and the Big Coon empties into the Arkansas at Garfield, Pawnee County. The Rattlesnake, the main stream of Stafford County, has its head waters near the central portion of Franklin Township, and has only about six miles length in Edwards County. The country away from the Arkansas is an undulating upland prairie. The river bottom along the Arkansas is about three miles wide, and sand hills are open to view on the river, for many miles, at Kinsley. There are several cattle and sheep ranches in the county.

GENERAL HISTORY.

W. C. and R. E. Edwards were among the very earliest settlers. . They built the first brick building in the county, and it was occupied as a court house for many years. After them, this county is said to have been named. The county offices in 1883, are held for the most part in a frame building, south of the Edwards County Bank Building, which was the one formerly used for county purposes. H. M. McCaddy & Son carry on the banking business, in the building now occupied by the county, and the County Treasurer's office is held in the banking room. A robbery of the bank occurred in December, 1882, but the funds stolen therefrom were shortly after recovered. In April, 1873, there were settlers in the county who came from Maine. N. L. Humphrey, Beza Blanchard, F. C. Blanchard, his son, W. F. Blanchard, a son-in-law, and two or three daughters made up the number. E. K. Smart started a lumber-yard at Kinsley, in March, 1873; T. L. Rogers opened a general store there in April, 1873; N. C. Boles, now of Holton, Jackson County, was the first postmaster at Kinsley—then Peters—in May, 1873. A daughter was born to Simon Cass, in August, 1873; William Emerson and Nellie Chase were united in marriage, April 11, 1874. The first church edifice—the Congregationalist—was completed early in 1875, and it was largely the gift of E. W. Kinsley, of Boston, Mass., after whom the town of Kinsley was named. Its cost was about $2,000

In 1874 occurred the memorable grasshopper raid, which did much damage in Edwards County. The first meeting of the County Commissioners occurred on September 5, of this year, and an order was passed authorizing the Commissioners severally, and in person to ascertain the effects of the grasshopper raid in the county, and to report the number of persons rendered destitute thereby, with a view of making the facts known to the Legislature, which had been called to meet in special session, September 15. In October this report was sent in to Governor Osborn, and was as follows:

> Our crops are totally destroyed; not one bushel of vegetables or grain being saved for man or beast. Our people are mostly poor people, without wealthy relatives or friends to assist them in their extremity. We are the furthest west of any agricultural settlement in the State. We have personally and carefully investigated each case and find six families, containing twenty-two persons, totally destitute; five families, containing eighteen persons, partially destitute. The above are the only persons in the county that will need aid to carry them to another crop. We believe $500, judiciously expended, will be sufficient with what they can earn, to keep them in the necessaries of life. If not considered out of place for the junior county of the State, we would suggest that if money is appropriated by the forthcoming extra session of the Legislature for the relief of the destitute, the Commissioners or Committee, who will by law have the expending of the funds, be instructed to employ all able-bodied, destitute persons, to whom relief is to be granted, to work on public improvements, such as highways, bridges, etc., paying them reasonable wages therefor, thereby encouraging industry and self-reliance, to say nothing of the benefits in the way of improvements. The really worthy would prefer that mode to gratuitous charity, which often encourages laziness and pauperism. We have not included those people having stock, etc., upon which they can realize money to help themselves till more prosperous times. All of which is respectfully submitted.

School District No. 1, was organized November 14, 1874, and the school house was completed in Kinsley in 1877. In 1883 there are twenty-two School Districts in the county; one of which is a joint one with Pawnee County. The County Superintendents have been W. C. Knight, W. F. Blanchard, George W. Milner, and Joseph Ferguson. There are graded schools at Kinsley, and at Offerle.

The Baptists, Congregationalists, Methodist Episcopalians, Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics are the religious denominations of the county. The Catholics have two church edifices, and have the greatest number of communicants. The Methodists and Presbyterians are the next strongest. The Congregationalists, Methodists, and Catholics each own church edifices at Kinsley.

On September 16, 1873, the Kinsley Reporter was issued as a monthly; in April, 1874, it became a semi-monthly; in January, 1875, a weekly publication. Two years later it passed into the hands of W. T. Bruer, and was united with the Edwards County Leader, the first number of which was issued March 29, 1877, with W. T. Bruer as editor and proprietor. It was Republican in its politics. The Valley Republican, Charles L. Hubbs, proprietor, issued its first number November 3, 1877. It became the Kinsley Graphic, May 4, 1878; Werter R. Davis, proprietor, and M. M. Lewis, editor. As a party organ it was Republican. June 1, 1878, Mr. Hubbs started the

COUNTY ELECTIONS AND OFFICERS.

By virtue of a proclamation issued by Gov. Thomas A. Osborne, in August, 1874, Charles L. Hubbs, Nicholas L. Humphrey and George W. Wilson were appointed special County Commissioners of Edwards County, and James A. Walker was appointed special County Clerk. These men met at the Buffalo House, in Kinsley, September 3, 1874, and Charles L. Hubbs was appointed Chairman of the Board of County Commissioners. One of the first acts of this Court was to divide the county into the municipal townships of Kinsley, Trenton and Brown, and designate places for holding elections therein at the regular State election, November 3, 1874. At the Commissioners' Court meeting held October 5, 1874, W. C. Knight was chosen County Superintendent of Public Instruction; an order was passed providing for a vote on the location of the permanent county-seat, and for a loan of the credit of the county for $1,000 for the purchase of books for county records, seals, etc. These matters were voted on at the general election, November 3, 1874. Kinsley received 69 out of the 74 votes cast. The vote on the loan was 47 for, 23 against, and George W. Crane, of Topeka, furnished the necessary records for the county. At this election Thomas A. Osborn received 71 votes for Governor, and James C Casey had 1 vote. Charles L. Hubbs was elected Representative; F. C. Blanchard, J. A. Brothers and T. L. Rogers, County Commissioners; William Emerson, County Clerk; E. A. Boyd, County Treasurer; V. D. Billings, Sheriff; J. L. Perry, Coroner, L. W. Higgins, Register of Deeds; J. H. Woods, Clerk of the District Court; Taylor Flick, County Attorney; Massena Moore, Probate Judge; W. C. Knight, Superintendent of Public Instruction; Frank A. White, County Surveyor.

Kinsley Township cast 44 votes. J. A. Walker was chosen Trustee; N. D. Humphrey and V. D. Billings, Justices of the Peace. Trenton Township cast 22 votes. Emmett. Dickens was elected Trustee; Marion Soward and David P. Daniels, Justices of the Peace. Brown Township cast 8 votes; elected William Williams, Jr., Trustee; B. Blanchard and E. A. Boyd, Justices of the Peace.

The Commissioners elected November 3 met on the 14th, and made choice of T L. Rogers for Chairman. At the session of December 17, 1874, W. C. Reed and Miss Florence G. Blanchard were appointed School Examiners. A contract was made with W. C. Edwards for three rooms in the second story of his brick building, to be leased for one year to the county at $30 per month.

At the time of the organization of Edwards County it was included in the Twenty-fifth Senatorial district, and Henry Clay St Clair, of Sumner County, represented it in the Senate of 1875 and 1876. By the Apportionment Act of 1876 it was located in the Thirty-seventh Senatorial district, and Thomas F. Taylor, of Reno, represented it in the Senate of 1877 and 1879; J. C. Strong, of Pawnee, in the Senate of 1881; Simon Motz, of Ellis, in the Senate of 1883. By the Legislative Apportionment Act of 1881 it becomes a part of the Thirty-fifth Senatorial district in 1884, which then elects a Senator for four years, the term commencing in January, 1885.

Charles L. Hubbs was admitted as a member of the House from Edwards County, January 12, 1875. On the 21st of January, Atty.-Gen. Randolph gave an opinion that the members from Edwards and eleven other counties were not legally entitled to seats, because of the smallness of the votes cast in their respective counties at the election of 1874. The House declared the seat of Mr. Hubbs vacant on the 28th of January, and adopted the resolution that he have the per diem pay of the members and mileage in coming to and returning from the Legislature. On February 10 the House seceded partially from its former action, and adopted the following preambles and resolutions:

WHEREAS, Hon. C L. Hubbs was duly returned as elected to this House from Edwards County, and subsequently his seat was declared vacant under the constitutional amendment; and

WHEREAS, There is no person entitled to represent the people of that county; and

WHEREAS, Mr. Hubbs has remained here, and is engaged in attending to the wants of his constituents; therefore, be it

Resolved, That Mr. Hubbs be allowed the privileges of this House, but without the right to vote, and that he be allowed the per diem of a member during the session.

Mr. Hubbs is the only member of a Kansas Legislature whose failure to secure a title to a seat in the Legislature has not deprived him of his right to draw his pay as a member. There were 74 votes cast for Representative at the election in 1874 and in 1875. In the former year C. L. Hubbs had 46: A. L. Kendall, 28. In 1875 Taylor Flick had 52; A. L Kendall, 20; scattering, 2. The county was not represented in the House in 1876, but Mr. Flick was the Representative in 1877. The vote cast in 1876 was 338; in 1878 it was 546; in 1880, 416; in 1882, 429.

Edwards County was not included in the legislative apportionment of 1876. It is District No. 117 in the apportionment of 1881. Its Representative in 1877 was Taylor Flick, in 1879 it was John E. Willey, in 1881 it was C. H. Kirkpatrick, in 1883 it was Dr. B. R. Mosher. From 1875 to 1880 changes were made in the boundaries of the townships, and the number has been increased from three to six. There have been but a few long term men in the offices of the county. The following shows who have been in possession of the offices from the time of the county organization:

KINSLEY.

At one time, W. C. Edwards and Taylor Flick held about all the real interests of the place. The city is now spread out over a large area, extending for a long distance each side of the railroad track. It has been afflicted with famine, pestilence and fire; it has had two boldly planned train robberies, and a bank robbery on December 9, 1882, in which the County Treasurer, J. W. Crawford, was seemingly implicated, and the duties of his office have since been performed by another; yet with these calamities it has risen Phœnix-like from its ashes, and is now indeed a thriving business town. It is abundantly supplied with stores of the different kinds, with banks, mills, lumber-yards, and here are mechanics of almost every kind. It has the Ohio House, the Carlin House, and the pleasant and spacious eating house of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, situated a few rods west of the station, where the noonday meals are furnished eastern and western passengers. Here are three resident clergymen, and the Rev. William M. Honnell, an early Kansas Missionary, ministers to the Presbyterian organization at stated intervals. The legal and medical professions are well represented, and from their ranks have men arisen here of quite marked distinction. Kinsley has a Masonic Lodge, known as Mount Moriah. Its last elected officers were installed by Capt. Henry Booth, of Larned, December 26, 1882. They are: Robert McCause, W. M.; W. I. Nichols, Secretary; J. E. McArthur, S. W.; W. D. Erwin, J. W.; E. A. Noble, Treasurer.

Kinsley is a city of the third class, and its city officers can be enrolled as follows: Mayor, L. G. Boies; Police Judge, P. C. Clapp; Clerk, H. C. Bingham; Treasurer, W. D. Erwin; Attorney, J. W. Crawford; Marshal, W. A. Snow; Councilmen, S. F. Griffith, John Fulton, George Grassell, I. V. Lewis, and Charles Reitler. Several secret organizations exist here in a prosperous condition. The robbery of the bank before referred to, has proved to be but a small loss, all of the $12,000 supposed to have been taken therefrom has been recovered, excepting about $400. The matter comes before the court at the March term.

Kinsley is about centrally located on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, between Nettleton on the northeast, and Offerle on the southwest. Nettleton is a little trading point, near the line of Edwards and Pawnee counties. Offerle is near the boundary of Ford County. In 1876, Lawrence Offerle, a native of France, accompanied by a number of the settlers from Geneseo, Ill., bought land at Offerle and vicinity; he had the town site surveyed, and put up the first building in April, and opened a store there in May, and had a post-office established in June. Here is a church where there is preaching both in English and in German. The town is nicely located on the grand western plateau of the Upper Arkansas Valley. Mr. Offerle's sons, Abner and E. E., have a general store here, and Henry F., is an extensive cattle-raiser and finds a large range.

LOCATION AND GENERAL FEATURES.

RENO County is located on both sides of the Arkansas River, in the south-central part of the State. It is bounded on the north by Rice and McPherson; on the east by Harvey and Sedgwick; on the south, by Sedgwick and Kingman, and on the west, by Pratt and Barton counties. The county, which is the second largest county in the State, is forty-two miles long, from east to west, and thirty miles from north to south, and contains thirty-five congressional townships, or 1,260 square miles. Its topographical features are common to other counties in this section of the State, and especially those traversed by the Arkansas River. An exceptional feature is noticed and found to consist in a ridge of sand hills, which were first apparent in the northwest part of Harvey County, and in parts of McPherson and Sedgwick. The hills entering Reno from the northeast, run nearly west until within four miles north of Hutchinson, when they deflect northward and extend into Rice County; here they are interrupted by Cow Creek, and farther west by the Arkansas River. They are forty miles long and from two to four miles in width, and rise above the valley in gentle slopes, from forty to eighty feet. The summits of these hills are composed of little hillocks, separated by table lands, containing from 50 to 250 acres. Aside from these hills, the general surface is gently undulating. The face of the county is divided into bottom land, 15 per cent; upland, 85 per cent; forest (Government survey), 1 per cent; prairie, 99 per cent.

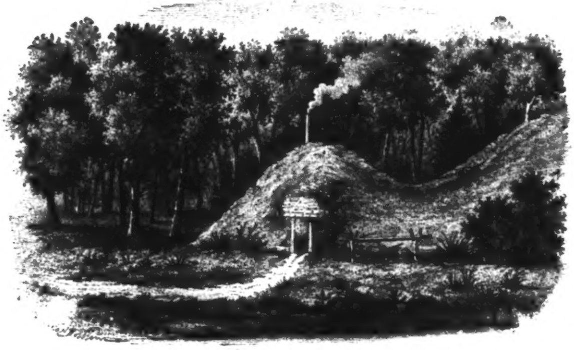
A glance at the map will convince the most skeptical, that Reno is one of the well-watered counties in the State. The Arkansas River flows through the county in a southeasterly direction, for forty miles, with one important tributary on the north, known as Cow Creek, which enters the county from the north, and empties into it six miles below Hutchinson. The northeast part of the county is watered for fifteen miles by the Little Arkansas, while the northwestern portion is drained by Peace and Salt creeks. The North Fork of the Ninnescah enters the county from the west, and flows in a southeasterly direction, for forty miles, leaving the county near the southeast corner. An important tributary of the Ninnescah, is Clear River, which rises in the southwestern part, and flowing northeast, empties into it, five miles below Arlington. These streams, with numerous smaller tributaries, are ever flowing over gravelly bottoms. Numerous springs are found in all portions of the county, especially in the sand hills, where good water is always abundant.

The soil in the Arkansas Valley is composed chiefly of a mineral element, washed down from the mountains, which forms a light sandy loam, from two to four feet in depth resting on a sub-soil of sand and gravel, and is sub-irrigated by the waters of the river. The soil on the uplands is a black loam, from two to five feet in depth, resting on a sub-soil composed of clay and sand, so intermixed as to form compactness, but readily permits the sub-drainage of the soil in wet seasons. The soil of the sand hills, as the name signifies, is "Sand, sand; still sand, and sand, and sand again." But they are not so sandy as to prevent the growing of nutritious grasses, and on many of the side slopes, good crops are raised. Many stockmen prefer these hills for grazing purposes.

Reno County has a mean altitude of about 1,500 feet above the Gulf of Mexico, and is traversed by the Thirty-eighth parallel. Always swept by breezes, its inhabitants are not troubled by malaria influences; while those who come with diseases of the respiratory organs, find relief. Long summers and short winters, as a general rule, are noticeable.

It is known as the Banner county of the State, having taken the premium at the State Fair, held in 1882. Out of 557,816 taxable acres of land, 135,672 are under cultivation. The value of the said acres being $1,280,745. The total value of all taxable property is $2,123,800.98; and of railroad lands, $271,481.98. During the year 1882, 27,774 acres were sown in winter wheat; 2,640 acres of rye; 154, spring wheat; 65,708, of corn; 7,417, of oats; 2,177, of broom-corn; and of millet and Hungarian, 22,350 acres; 41,000 tons of wild and tame hay was cut; 23,222 pounds of cheese, and 385,072 pounds of butter made. In the county there are 23,693 cattle, 25,250 sheep and 10,850 swine. In nurseries there are 239 acres, and in artificial forest 4,985 acres. Population, which has increased rapidly, is now 11,439.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS.



FIRST WHITE MAN'S DWELLING IN RENO COUNTY.*

To retain clear and lucid impressions of the early settlement of Reno County, it will be necessary for the reader to first bear in mind, changes have been made in its original boundaries. In 1872, that tier of townships embraced in Range 4 on the east, and Township 22 on the north, were added to the county. It was in this north tier of townships the first settlement of Reno County occurred, and it is necessary to make this distinction in order to give the first settlers of Rice County credit as being the first in Reno. In the autumn of 1870, Lewis M. Thomas, after prospecting through the valleys of the Solomon and Smoky Hill rivers, turned his course southward, and following along the valley of Turkey Creek, in McPherson County, to a short distance above its confluence with the Little River. He then turned to the northwest, crossed the river at the Stone Corral, a stopping place on the Santa Fe trail, and visited a small settlement near Atlanta, in Rice County. Not being satisfied with the advantages at that point, he returned to McPherson County, and being attracted by the cottonwood groves that at that time covered the sand hills and the abundant herbage which covered the hill slopes came to the conclusion to locate on Section 8, Township 22 south, Range 5 west. November, 1870, dates his arrival as the first settler of Reno County, under its present boundaries. In December of the same year, Mr. Thomas, visiting Lawrence, purchased stock and supplies, and returned to his home, where he continued to reside up to a late period. On his return he was accompanied by John Hunt, an Englishman, who located and settled in the valley of the Little Arkansas, but afterwards, owing to his having occupied a railroad section of land, left the county. Antedating Mr. Hunt's settlement a few days was that of J. H. D. Rosan, who, in looking up the cattle business, decided to make a permanent location on Section 4, Township 22 Range 6. This was in the fore part of December, 1870. Mr. Rosan, who was accompanied by James C. Burnett, "ranched" at Thomas' until February 1, when they crossed the sand hills and settled at a place known for many years afterward as Rosan's Ranch. In March, Rosan, his brother, Charles W. Rosan, and Charles Street, drove in a large herd of Texas cattle. During the next month, a surveyor was procured from Salina, and their land was surveyed—the first in Rice or Reno counties. George H. Watson located in the valley of Cow Creek in March, 1871. While these settlements were being made in the northern part of what is now known as Grant and Little River townships, a party of sixteen persons entered the county from the east and encamped near the mouth of Cow Creek, early in March, 1871. The party was composed of John N. Shahan, William and Robert Bell, William Cadwell, Mr. Haverlin, John Butcher, P. Welch, William Kacy, F. Foley, Isaac Ijams and wife, James Freese, William Shoop and wife, Westley Ijams, Hannah and Mary Freese. Many of this party located claims along the river, as far north as present city of Hutchinson, March 14, 1871. Ante-dating their arrival was that of A. S. Demock, who located February 9, 1871, in what was then known as the "Sedgwick Strip," in the eastern part of the (present) Reno County. He was followed by Luther A. Dodge, February 13, 1871, who was the first settler in what is now Clay Township. During the spring, John Swanson, a brother of Lewis Thomas, and several Swedes located in that part of the county. In the summer of the same year, Charles Collins, D. B. Miller, A. Smith, L. S. Shields and his two sons, Samuel and George, Peter Shafer, George Mills, E. Shafer, B. F. Evarts, George Lafferty, Dr. A. S. Crane, William Lockart, and John Curley located in different parts of the county lying north of the Arkansas River. About this time claims were taken in the upper Cow Creek valley by A. K. Burrell, Mrs. Mead and sons, and Messrs. Parker and Decker.

Up to the spring of 1872, the settlement of Reno County was confined to the northeastern portion, north of the Arkansas River. Over three-fourths of the county south of the Arkansas, not a settler could be found, with the exception of I. M. Gray, J. B. Risting, and perhaps a few others, who located in the southeast, in Haven Township, in June, 1871. The non-settlement of this portion of the county, at an early date, was due to the difficulty in crossing the river. This was, however, amended by the construction of a bridge, of which mention is made elsewhere, across the river at Hutchinson, in the fall of 1872. The first settlers in that part of the county, south and west of the river, by townships, according to the original boundaries, may be classified as follows: Lincoln Township, by A. B. Cory, W. R. Marshall, J. H. and J. A. Grayson, A. M. Switzer, W. W. Pierce, J. Jeffreys, A. Hutchinson, S. Ryan, and W. White, in April, 1872; in Castleton Township, William McDemett, A. W. Smith and John R. Smith, H. T. Wheeler, William Hayes, William Wallace, and J. Medberry, in the spring of 1872; in Centre Township, in December, 1872, by Bollin, W. L. Teeter, and in March, 1873, Edward Jones and Richard Cravalsy; they were followed in September and October by Samuel and Zenas Dilley, H. O. Hasa, Hugh Ghormly, Thomas Crotts, R. King, with their families. Westminster Township was first settled by John Martin, in the spring of 1873. He was followed by Messrs. Fryrear, Howell, and Harriman. Troy Township was first settled by Samuel Slack and Thomas Scorsby, in April, 1873; Loda Township, in August, 1873, by J. F. Stevens, M. A. Long, and J. T. Stevens; Salt Creek Townships, by T. B. Hand, in October, 1872; Grove and Langdon townships in February and May, 1874, by Jacob Armstrong and Jesse Sinclair, respectively. The first settler in Medford Township was R. D. Kelsey, in the fall of 1873. Sumner Township, in the southeast corner of the county, was first settled by John L. Gill, in March, 1872. Whole pages might be devoted to mentioning names and dates of early settlement in the county, but for further information the reader is referred to the biographical department of this work.

EARLY EVENTS.

About the first prominent object that relieved the weary eyes of the first settlers of Reno County, as they entered it from the northeast, were the sand hills, covered with a heavy growth of cottonwood timber. This belt of timber commenced in little straggling bunches on the hill summits, near the edge of Harvey County, and growing more dense westward, ended four or five miles west of Rosan's Ranch. Trees were found nearly eight feet in circumference, and fifty feet to the limbs. As this belt was about the only timber for miles around, it disappeared rapidly until the winter of 1872-'73, when the supply was almost entirely exhausted.

Nothing causes so much terror and consternation among frontier settlements as an "Indian Scare." Early in April, 1871, a large hunting party of Kaw Indians pitched their tents on the north side of the Arkansas River near the present city of Hutchinson, and another party of Sacs and Foxes, on the south side. As these Indians were half civilized and amicable, the settlers had no apprehensions of danger. Nothing occurred to relieve the monotony of an every-day life until some time in July, when one day, a commotion was observed in both camps. On inquiry it was found that a large party of Cheyennes were in the immediate vicinity and threatening an attack on their red brethren for a former invasion in their territory. So great was their haste that the news soon spread to parties gathering wood on the Sand hill, who immediately ceased that occupation and "vamosed" to the general camping place. A few hours later the whole party suddenly decamped. As the Cheyennes are noted to be among the most ferocious and blood-thirsty savages on the plains, the white settlers were alarmed at the probable critical situation. Some of them, throwing their movables into wagons, hastily fled to Sedgwick City and other places of refuge. A greater number remained to defend their homes. Among those who fled was a small party from Wisconsin, which had selected land along Cow Creek, but were still living in their wagons. At the first alarm they hurriedly departed for the East, and being so terrified, did not return. The Cheyennes did not make the expected attack, with the exception of one party, which dashed into the grazing grounds near Rosan's Ranch, and drove off a number of cattle, belonging to Mr. Rosan, and others living in northern Reno and southern Rice counties. The cattlemen organized a party of thirty-five or forty men, pursued the savages, and overtaking them fifty miles southwest, recovered their stock. This ended the first great Indian scare.

Reno County ten years ago, was the home of the American bison, or buffalo. We make the following extracts from a sketch published in the Hutchinson News, descriptive of a buffalo hunt:

---

*This was a cattle ranche building, upon the northeast quarter of Section 4, Township No. 22 south, Range 6 west, occupied by J. H. D. Rosan while engaged in cattle raising. The corral was just back of it, both house and corral being then surrounded by heavy timber.

It was a small but brave party who set out to explore the vast plains that cradle the beautiful Ninnescah and Cimarron. The 17th (September, 1872) dawned bright and fresh as the moon which sprang into life at the divine "let there be light." In the early daylight before the sun had purloined the brilliants which the lavish night had spread upon the grass, upon the flowers, etc., our train, consisting of two wagons, moved off majestically from town (Hutchinson) across the broad, green prairie toward the noble old river which bends lovingly in a glistening segment around our little town. Ariving at its banks, we alighted, took the boat, and were floated over its rippling surface without accident. * * We were soon seated in comfortable prairie schooners and skimming over the grand expanse which stretched before us as free and light-hearted as the prairie swallows, which described such graceful circles above our heads. There were no traces of bison the first day out, but like the veterans of the ocean, we were determined, fearless, anddeclared that we would find buffalo, or go to—Medicine Lodge! Fortunately we were not called to place our precious scalps in jeopardy, by a near approach to the vicinity of the noble red man, for in the picturesque valley that lies beyond the lovely Ninnescah, we descried in the far distance upon the porcelain of the sky, a long black line of buffalo, gently feeding upon the rich grass that lay beneath them, while nearer a number of antelope gamboled in all their untaught grace, in fearless innocence. After a fruitless attempt to destroy these "innocent creatures," * * * we lashed our teams and bore down in full sail upon the herd of buffalo. As we drew near it was decided that the wagon should stop and allow the huntsmen to approach on foot, and accordingly three of the party, Mr. Halowell, Mr. Rosan, and Mr. Flick, accoutered for the fray, started off in a half run, while Mr. Hutchinson and Mr. Whitelaw sat complacently upon their past laurels, as "buffalo slayers" with a perfect big Indian indifference as to the exciting scenes.

Disdainful of inequalities of the ground and ignoring sand burs, our heroes sped along, half bent, like true sons of the forest, until within 300 yards of the herd, when they dropped upon the ground, three great human anacondas, silently, relentlessly. At last when patience was almost exhausted, as we stood upon the wagon seats, straining our eyes to catch sight of the smoke as it was belched forth from the carbines of the recumbent trio, they rose simultaneously, and rushing forward as one man, sent the pitiless discharges into the midst of the defenceless herd. There was a mad start and the vast black line surged and wavered, and threw itself into wild targets and then concentrating, swept around to the east, a huge crescent of furious quadrupeds. * * * The earth seemed to quiver under their furious tramp as they rushed by their undaunted foes, leaving the fair plains cumbered with the huge form of one of their number, reeking in the gore of its death wounds. Drawing near the poor victim, it was impossible to repress a pang, as its large, soft eyes wandered beseechingly from face to face, seeming to ask, "What comes next, in this the fulness of my agony?" A few moments and the glittering knives were flashing in and out, * * in the quivering flesh, until the choicest bits were selected and placed in the wagons, partly as trophies, partly to add to our evening banquet.

Among the first events occurring in Reno County may be mentioned the following: The first marriage was that of James Carrington and Miss Emma, a daughter of A. S. Coombs, of Grant Township, in January, 1872.

The first birth occurred in Hutchinson, and was a son of Mr. Johnson. The first death, a man called Mountain Jack, who was accidentally shot by a companion named Jacob Eisenberger, while a party were making preparations for a buffalo hunt. The first lawsuit in the county was held before D. D. Olmstead, Justice of the Peace, April 3, 1872. The case involved an action of replevin of a certain gray pony, valued at $35. Lewis Josephine vs. Jacob Eisenberger, being the contestants. During the season of 1873, Jno. N. Shahan brought into the county the first threshing machine, which weighed 6,585 pounds. That season he and William Bell operated it, first threshing their own wheat, then that of George Leverty. Oats yielded from seventeen to forty bushels, and spring wheat ten to eighteen bushels per acre. The first political convention in Reno County was held at Hutchinson, February 1, 1872, in a room over Young's shoe store. At this meeting occurred the nomination of the first county officers, who were subsequently elected. Regarding the second political convention held in the county, the following appeared in the Hutchinson News, of August 3, 1872: "Pursuant to a call, published in the News, the Republicans of Reno County met in the court house last Saturday. The meeting organized by electing W. W. Updegraff, chairman, and H. Whiteside, secretary. Secretary read call for a meeting, and H. Hodson and C. W. Ellis were chosen as a committee to report a list of names for county central committee. The following gentlemen were appointed: D. M. Lewis, A. S. Dimock, A. Lynch, Dr. Dedding, and W. W. Updegraff."

COUNTY ORGANIZATION.

The county of Reno was first created by the State Legislature, early as March, 1868 and the name Reno conferred upon it in honor of that gallant soldier, Gen. Reno, who fell in the battle of Gettysburg. The territorial limits were established as follows: "Commencing where the south line of Township 23 south, intersects the east of Range 5 west; thence south with said range line to the southwest corner of Sedgwick County; thence west to the east of Range 11 west; thence north with said range line to the south line of Township 22, thence east to the place of beginning." In 1872 the State Legislature made the following changes: Five Congressional townships were taken from the south end of Rice County, two from the southwest corner of McPherson County, four from the northwest corner of Sedgwick County, and added to Reno County, while three tiers of townships were detached on the south and added to the present county of Kingman.

The provisional organization of the county was effected January 1, 1872, by the appointment, by the Governor, of C. C. Bemis, W. H. Bell, Thomas Allen as a Board of County Commissioners, and A. C. Kies, County Clerk. At a special election held January 6, 1872, at which 112 votes were cast, C. C. Hutchinson was elected as a Representative to the State Legislature. On February 3, of the same year, the momentous question as to the location of the county seat was effectually settled by a unanimous vote, the result of which gave the honor to Hutchinson. Another special election was held March 12, at which the following county officials were chosen: A. C. Kies, County Clerk; Harry Hodgson, District Clerk; Charles Collins, Sheriff; W. E. Hutchinson, Superintendent of Public Instruction; S. H. Hammond, Register of Deeds; W. W. Updegraff, Probate Judge; Luther Dodge, Surveyor; C. S. Martin, Coroner; L. Houk, County Attorney, and C. C. Bemis, W. H. Bell and W. J. Vansickle, County Commissioners.

At this time a sub-division of the county into municipal townships had not been made, and at an election held April 16, 1872, the following township officers were elected, and had jurisdiction over the entire county, as Reno Township: Peter Shafer, Trustee; D. B. Miller, Treasurer; S. N. Parker, Clerk; J. Rhoades and D. D. Olmstead, Justices of the Peace, and John McMurray and J. Brown, Constables. At a meeting of the County Board, October 8, 1872, Valley Township was organized and an election ordered to be held November 14, 1872, but "owing to a disastrous prairie fire and other calamities," it did not take place until January 3, 1873. At a meeting held April 12, 1873, the following named townships were laid off: Nickerson (changed to Grant, May 20, 1873), Little River, Haven, Castleton and Clay. September 1, 1873, Lincoln and Centre townships were organized. Salt Creek, Medford, Westminster, Langdon and Troy townships were organized March 24, 1874. At this time the sub-division of the county was complete, but owing to the increase in population and the size of the townships, changes have been made in the boundaries, and new townships formed, as follows: Grove Township, October 3, 1876; Grant and Reno townships, January 8, 1877; Loda and Sumner townships, July 3 1877; Hayes Township, October 6, 1877; Albion Township, October 8, 1878; Bell Township, October 17, 1878; Enterprise Township, April 9, 1879; Rosco and Plevna, July 9, 1879; Arlington Township, January 4, 1881.

During the spring of 1872 a petition was circulated among the legal voters of the county asking that an election be ordered held, for the purpose of determining the feasibility of issuing bonds to the amount of $60,000, to be used as follows: $15,000 for a court house; $35,000 for a bridge across the Arkansas at Hutchinson, an iron bridge across the Little Arkansas, and two iron bridges across Cow Creek; and $10,000 to pay the first year's interest on the bonds and current expenses, which could not be provided for by taxation. At an election, held April 25, the three propositions were separately submitted, and the bonds were carried by majorities of eighty-eight, ninety-five and eighty-seven respectively. The contract for building the bridges was let to the King Bridge Company on the 8th day of June, who completed them in the fall of the same year.

The contract for building the court house was let to W. E. Hutchinson, July 27, 1872. Work was begun on the building and continued until the fall of the same year, when, owing to a change in the original plans, including the addition of an iron jail in the basement, it was claimed that the amount voted was not sufficient to complete the building. A second bond election was ordered, held December 21st, at which the following propositions were submitted to the voters: Shall bonds to the amount of $7,000 be issued for the completion of the court house; $2,000 for a bridge across the Ninnescah; and $9,000 for general expenses. The intelligent voters decided that they should, the proposition being carried by majorities of seventy, fifty-three and forty-nine respectively, in a total vote of 252; a falling off of more than 100 from the preceding general election. The court house, as completed, is a large two-story brick and stone building 40x60 feet, and stands to-day as a monument of Western enterprise and progress. In the basement is located the jail, which is constructed in a solid and substantial manner.

November 18, 1873, bonds to the amount of $10,000 were voted for the purpose of establishing an asylum for the county poor. Owing to the grasshopper visitation in 1874 it was deemed advisable to use the amount above mentioned in aiding those who had lost all from the ravages made by the aforesaid 'hopper.

The first division of the county into Commissioners' Districts was made August 13, 1874, and included the following: District No. 1—Grant, Little River, Clay, Valley and Reno townships; District No. 2—Castleton, Lincoln and Haven; District No. 3—Balance of the county.

The first term of the District Court for Reno County was opened August 14, 1872, in a temporary court house erected by the county, Judge W. R. Brown presiding. There were also present L. Houk, County Attorney; H. Hodgson, District Clerk; Chas. Collins, Sheriff; Jno. McMurray, Under Sheriff. The first case taken up was that of Chas. Meyers, indicted for running a gambling house. Only two or three important cases were tried during the term.

Under the faithful administration of the different sets of county officials, who have up to the present time been careful and efficient in their several capacities, the county of Reno is to be congratulated for the excellent condition of affairs in its official organization. The present county official roster is as follows: Clerk, W. R. Marshall; Treasurer, Wilson McCandless; Register of Deeds, Jno. Payne; Probate Judge, S. B. Zimmerman; Clerk of District Court, E. S. Handy; Attorney, R. A. Campbell; Coroner, A. W. McKinney; Surveyor, J. M. Harsha; Superintendent, E. L. Jewell; Sheriff, J. M. Hedrick; Commissioners, E. W. Elliot, A. M. Switzer, Elmer and Everett.

SCHOOLS AND COUNTY SOCIETIES.

Early in 1872, District No. 1 was organized, and embraced Hutchinson and vicinity, its territorial limits being at that time similar to its present boundaries. In connection with the district a select school was opened in Hutchinson by Miss Jennie Hodgson, in a frame building on Main street. Other districts were soon organized, principally north of the river. In March, 1873, District No. 2 issued bonds to the amount of $1,000, and a schoolhouse was soon erected. South of the river, District No. 17 was the first to issue bonds and build a schoolhouse. Bonds to the amount of $800 were issued May 17, 1873, for that purpose. At the first county election, held March 12, 1872, W. E. Hutchinson was elected as County Superintendent, but resigned his position July 6, of the same year. D. M. Hunt was appointed his successor, but he too resigned, August 2, 1872. He was succeeded by Alexander Lynch, who officiated the remainder of the year. January 1, 1873, Taylor Flick entered upon his arduous duties as Superintendent. During his official career in that capacity, a large portion of the county was divided into school districts. His labors deserve credit, but his records, censure. J. P. Cassidy, the next incumbent, officiated from January 1, 1874, until the summer of 1876, when on account of pressing and urgent business he was suddenly obliged to leave the country. The remainder of his term was filled by L. Houk. The next four years, the office was acceptably filled by J. W. Kanaga. E. L. Jewell, the present incumbent, was elected November 3, 1880, and is now in his second term. The following statistical information will show that the educational interests in Reno County have kept pace with her prosperity: In the 103 organized school districts in the county there are 109 school houses, four of which were erected in 1882, at a combined cost of $6,188. Out of the 4,267 persons within school age, 3,406 were enrolled as pupils, and 116 teachers are employed, at an average salary of—males, $35.35; females, $29.44. During the year, $6,673 in bonds were issued, making the total bonded indebtedness $45,662. $32,756.47 was received for the school year ending July, 1882 and of this amount $28,389.14 was expended for the laudable purpose—the educational interests in Reno County.

Reno County Agricultural and Joint Stock Association.—The first attempt towards organizing a Fair Association was made as early as January 18, 1873, when an organization was effected and the following officers elected: B. F. Evarts, president; M. Hoagland, vice-president; James M. Leidigh, recording secretary; J. H. Lawson, corresponding secretary; C. W. Clapp, treasurer; F. Ames, librarian. Neither records nor traditions state whether this organization ever held a fair or exhibition of any kind. It is averred, however, that agricultural exhibitions were held during the years 1876 and 1877. A society known as the "Reno County Agricultural and Joint Stock Association" was incorporated September 2, 1878, with a capital stock of $2,000. Following were the first officers and directors: W. McCandless, president; D. J. Cole, vice-president; H. Raff, treasurer; E. S. Handy, secretary; (no librarian); and Z. Tharp, S. A. Atwood, Charles Collins, A. S. Dimock, A. L. Kellogg, directors. During the same year the society purchased a tract of twenty acres adjoining the city on the east, and since that time have expended about $1,000 on improvements. The present officers are A. S. Dimcock, president; A. M. Switzer, vice-president; W. R. Marshall, treasurer; R. M. Easley, secretary; J. W. Kanaga, corresponding secretary; directors, William Astile, E. W. Elliott, C. L. Easley, S. A. Atwood, G. L. Dye.

HUTCHINSON.

The city of Hutchinson, sometimes known at the "gate city," and the metropolis and county seat of Reno County, is pleasantly located at a point where the A., T. & S. F. Railway strikes the Arkansas River. The city proper is located on both sides of Cow Creek, a stream that is utilized for its water-power. The appellation of the "Belle of the Arkansas Valley," has often been given to this place, situated as it is, in a country tributary to it, teeming with "milk and honey." But a little over ten years old, Hutchinson, with a population of 3,000, shows to-day convicting evidence of prosperity, in its magnificent business blocks, school buildings, court house, manufacturing establishments and private residences.

EARLY AND GENERAL HISTORY.

Twenty-five years ago, C. C. Hutchinson, came to Kansas and identified himself with her early history. He was prominent in the early history of Lawrence, and was the founder of Ottawa, Franklin County. Mr. Hutchinson was also author of "The Resources of Kansas," a work so valuable that the State Legislature passed a bill authorizing the purchase of 2,500 copies. During the building of the A., T. & S. Fe road westward from Topeka, he watched its progress carefully, and when the grade stakes of the present line were set prior to October, 1871, he closed a contract with the company for the purchase of Section 13, Township 23, Range 6, in Reno County. At that time the terminus of the road was at Newton, and when Mr. Hutchinson came out there was no wagon road, and to reach the site of this embryo city he followed the line of stakes set by the railroad engineers. On his arrival he found a few families in the immediate vicinity of the prospective town site. Captain D. Bell was located one mile north, George Laverty on the east, and two young men from Boston, who were occupying a small shanty used as a store, on the claim of A. F. Homer, adjoining the town on the west. Shortly after his arrival he was followed by his cousin, W. E. Hutchinson, who immediately took charge of the work of surveying off the town site, which up to this time had not been commenced. In all the contracts and deeds, a clause was inserted to the effect, that all lots and improvements thereon would revert back to the original owner in case the owner sold or gave away any spirituous or malt liquors prior to 1875. At the expiration of the time limited to, it was expected that the moral sentiment of the people would control the liquor traffic. In direct antagonism to this clause, a saloonist from Newton, opened the first business (?) enterprise in the place, by pitching a tent on the town site, and opening a stock of goods, consisting of a barrel of "go-as-you-please whiskey." At that time there was no county organization, consequently no county officers, and the founder of the town was perplexed as to what to do in the matter. The affair was suddenly ended by the action of Charles Collins, Deputy United States Marshal, who arrested the parties, took them to Newton and turned them over to a United States Commissioner.

The first lumber arrived on the town site November 12, 1871, and was a part of a building owned by A. F. Hormer, the first building put up in Rossville, on the Kansas Pacific Railroad. It was moved from there to Florence on the A., T. & S. Fe R. R., and was one of the first at that place. Taken to pieces, it was brought to Hutchinson in sections, and on the 13th of November, 1871, its third and last erection was begun. It was 16x60 feet and seven feet high, and the lumber was principally oak and black-walnut. The structure is still standing, occupied by M. J. Ruddy as a furniture store. On its completion Messrs. Tucker & Clapp moved in and opened a stock of goods, a hotel, and run the postoffice, which was established at that time. In one corner of the room C. C. Hutchinson opened a real estate office—the first in the county. In this office were made contracts for the erection of the Commercial House, the drug store of A. Dickey, the old jewelry store built by Jordan & Bemis, etc. The next building of note erected was moved from Newton by A. H. Williams and set up on the southeast corner of Main and First avenue. It was occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Williams, the latter being the first, lady in town, and, being such, was donated a corner lot by the accommodating founder. The building was used as a hotel, store, stage and express office, etc. During the winter the little settlement was increased by the arrival of E. Wilcox, A. B. Dickey, D. Alexander, Messrs. Hallowell and Sanders, and others who came and established themselves in business. In January, 1872, W. Bailey opened a stock of general merchandise in Williams' building, and was shortly followed by T. F. Leidigh with a grocery and provision store. Jordan & Bemis opened the next store, and about the same time E. Wilcox opened a hardware and agricultural implement store, and shortly afterwards J. S. Fay opened the Eagle Hotel. About the same time Messrs. J. & C. McMurray started a livery stable. During that year, 1872, the place grew rapidly, and soon had a population of several hundred souls. As the city progressed schools were established, churches and Sunday schools organized, brick buildings erected, trees planted, manufacturies established, societies organized, and in a few years the future success of Hutchinson was assured. To-day has not proved to the contrary.

INCORPORATION.

Hutchinson was incorporated as a city of the third class, and her first municipal election was held August 26, 1872. The result, according to the News of that date, "was a glorious victory for temperance and improvement over whisky and stagnation." NICKERSON.

The young, but progressive city of Nickerson, with a population of 1,300 inhabitants, is located in the northwestern portion of the county, ten miles from Hutchinson and one hundred and seventy-seven southwest of Topeka. It is the end of the second division of the A., T. & S. F. Railway, and is the site of the large and extensive machine and repair shops of the road. The future of the place is assured, as it is surrounded by a rich and fertile country, and within its limits about $200,000 is paid out annually by the railroad company.

EARLY HISTORY.

The original town site of Nickerson was laid off (on paper) in 1875, one mile east of the present site, by the railroad company. Early as 1872, a depot was built at that point, and the station was known as Nickerson, so named in honor of Thomas Nickerson, then President of the A., T. & S. F. Railway. The next building was erected by the railroad company in the fall of 1872, and used as a section house. In the fall of 1874 a schoolhouse was built. In August, 1875, Dr. L. A. Reeves located on the town site and erected a two-story frame building, and opened a stock of goods. In 1876 he sold his store to A Sievart. For the next two years these buildings comprised "Old Nickerson." In October, 1878, the present town site of Nickerson was laid off, on ground which was then covered by an extensive corn field owned by Mr. Sears. A very few days after the town site was surveyed, James Devitt commenced the foundation for the hotel known as the Dominion House. About the same time A. L. Harlow commenced the foundations for a building, afterwards known as the Harlow House. But before these buildings were completed, Dr. L. A. Reeves moved the building now occupied as the postoffice from Old Nickerson, and with the exception of a small frame structure, occupied by John Sears, it was the first building on the town site. By March, 1879, Dr. Reeves had the whole block up, now known as the Reeves Block. Probably the first building built on the town site was that erected by M. McCormick, and used as a drug store, in October, 1878. This was followed by a building used as a general store, and occupied by Sievart & Smith. Within sixty days Nickerson had two hotels, one dozen stores, two livery stables, two lumber yards, and a printing office.

Among the first settlers who identified themselves with the early history of Nickerson may be mentioned—Dr. L. A. Reeves, M. McCormick, Wm. Smalley, Wm. Scott, James Devitt, A. L. Harlow, A. Tucker, Charles Heath, Smith & Sievart, A Clark, A. J. Knight, Mr. Kent, L. Young, Joseph Kaufman, C. S. Brown, F. Wiers, John Haynes, H. Appel, G. A. Wagoner, and others.

The Nickerson postoffice was established in the summer of 1873, Mrs. M. J. Sears, Postmistress. The office was then located in a little sod house on the southeast corner of the present town site. In 1876, Mrs. Col. Budd was appointed, but officiated only a short time, when Dr. L. A. Reeves received the appointment. He acceptably filled the position up to the time of his death, October, 1882, since which time Mrs. L. A. Reeves has occupied the position. The Money Order System was established at this office in August, 1880, Charles E. Heath, purchasing the first order.

The first school building was erected in Old Nickerson, in the fall of 1874, and the first term was taught by Mary Kinney. In 1879, the building was moved onto the new town site and occupied until 1882, when the present building was completed at a cost of $7,000. The building is a large two-story brick, contains seven rooms, and is a credit to its district.

The Nickerson Argosy was first issued December 11, 1878, by Sargant & Bowman. February 12, 1879, Mr. Sargant purchased Bowman's interest and ran it until September 10, of the same year, when I. N. Bundy became sole proprietor. October 8, 1879, the paper was purchased by Hill, Brown & Co., who ran it until May 1, 1880, when L. C. Brown, the present editor and publisher, assumed control. The Argosy is a seven-column folio, Republican in politics, and is devoted to the interests of that section in general, and Nickerson in particular.

The wooden bridge across the Arkansas River at Nickerson, was completed in June, 1879, at a cost of $7,000, which sum was made up by the donation by the county, of $1,000, and the balance in bonds issued to the amounts of $4,500 and $5,100, by Grant and Salt Creek townships, respectively. The structure is 1,100 feet in length, and is an advantage, the value of which can not be estimated.

Nickerson was incorporated as a city of the third class, June 7, 1879, and the first set of city officials comprised the following named gentlemen: Mayor, L. A. Reeves; Council, M. McCormick, C. S. Brown, J. A. Moorse, J. O. Smith, H. R. Nickerson; Police Judge, D. D. Olmstead; Treasurer, C. E. Heath; Clerk, A. H. Jackson; Marshal, J. D. Reed. The present city officers are: Mayor, J. N. Woods; Councilmen, S. M. Wirt, A. S. Kent, E. J. Arnold, J. W. Mallory, J. M. Williams; Police Judge, D. D. Olmstead; Clerk, G. W. Cook; Marshal, D. W. Wright.

In 1859 he moved to Arkansas and lived there until the breaking out of the war, and, as his sentiments were strongly Union, found it not a congenial county, and in 1861 he left there on a boat with his household goods for Memphis. On arriving there, there was such excitement for fear of capture by the Union forces that the boat stopped just long enough to land her passengers and put off with all his effects, and he lost them as the boat was captured and burned while endeavouring to make its escape. This left him in hard circumstances, being sick, with a family of seven persons to support, but he secured a farm and though he met with losses during the war in the way of having stock stolen yet he managed to accumulate in addition to making a living for his family. In November, 1873, he came to Kansas and located on his present farm, and commenced by making the raising of wheat a specialty and was very successful, but, having lost his crops by hail just when they were very promising and realizing the disadvantage to him in having his mainstay destroyed, he has of late years gone into general farming and stock raising as being much more sure. He thinks the failure of crops has been a benefit to this locality in forcing general farming and not confining to any one branch of farming. When he came to Kansas he brought with him about $3,000, but his property to-day is worth at the lowest estimate $15,000. His health and that of the family has been almost perfect since locating here, as his expense for doctors has not exceeded $30 in ten years. He was married in May, 1875, to Miss Martha D. Moore, a native of Tennessee. They have eight children—George H., Stephen A., Ellen, Nancy A, Martha O., Mabel M., Elizabeth A. and Malvina M. In 1855, he moved from Ohio to Iowa and commenced the practice of medicine in Salina, Jefferson Co., Iowa. In 1859, he got the Pike's Peak fever and started for that place; but meeting so many coming back, he abandoned the project, and returning, located a claim adjoining the town of Highland, Doniphan Co., Kan., and engaged in the practice of medicine and improving his place. While here the doctor planted fruit trees extensively on his place, and was very successful in raising fine varieties, and was one of the first fruit growers in Kansas to market Kansas fruit. During the early part of the war he was troubled with bushwhackers and jayhawkers who visited the county, stealing horses and other property, until the citizens stopped it by summary measures, resulting in the death of a number of the marauders. Dr. M. was interested in the Highland University, in which he educated his sons. After ten years' practice in Kansas, the doctor turned his attention entirely to farming and raising and dealing in stock and horticulture. He was born in Connecticut and raised on a farm, and followed farming until he was twenty-one years of age, when he went to Boston, Mass., and engaged in ship-building, for a number of years, and came from there to Kansas in 1875, and located here. In 1876 Lincoln Township was visited by a terrible cyclone, sweeping everything before it. Some lives were lost, and not a few more or less bruised or injured. Mr. Williams' child was killed and he had his arm broken, while his wife has not recovered from the effects of it to this day. Mr. Robertson's loss was over $480. Part of his house was picked up over a mile away, and his stock and farm implements were scattered in every direction. He was married, in 1866, to Miss Augusta Comstock, a native of Connecticut. They have three children—Walter, Ida and Frederick.

EGBERT SEELY, farmer, Section 18, P. O. Hutchinson, owns 240 acres, 130 in a fine state of cultivation, six acres in orchard, a portion bearing, and the finest varieties of fruit; fifteen acres in cultivated timber, two miles of hedge fence, good frame dwelling of six rooms, fine barn, 24x54, and all necessary outbuildings, and hog yards and pens. He has 100 hogs, makes hogs a specialty, and has six head of horses. He also farms 160 acres belonging to his brother. In 1882 he raised himself over 4,000 bushels of grain—1,800 bushels wheat, 500 bushels oats, and the rest corn. Came to Kansas in April, 1878, and located here, and had only $10 to start with, but by industry and good management is independent. Born in the State of New York, April 30, 1832, and made it his home, with the exception of four years spent in Pennsylvania, until the war, when he enlisted in Company D, Thirteenth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery, and was doing garrison duty at Norfolk and Fortress Monroe, and mustered out in 1865. Was married, September 13, 1882, to Miss Emma Zimmers, a native of Ohio. Mr. S. is a member of the United Brethren Church.

A. M. SWITZER, farmer and nurseryman, Section 2, P. O. Hutchinson, owns 160 acres, 100 under cultivation, 40 acres in nursery stock, cultivated timber, orchard, vineyard and small fruits. His grove of timber is on the south side, making a complete wind-break for his nursery and orchard. He commenced his nursery in 1876, with the intention of ultimately making it a fruit farm, and from the present time he will turn his attention more to fruit and less to nursery stock. For the past six years his nursery business has averaged $2,000 per year. In 1882 he sold 600 quarts of strawberries and 1,100 quarts of blackberries; besides large quantities of grapes. The rest of his place he uses for general farming. Mr. S. was born in Ohio, March 7, 1849. In the spring of 1864, when only fifteen years of age, he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Sixty-first Regiment Ohio National Guards, for 100 days, and with his command, settled in the Valley of Virginia, and with Hunter on his Linchburg raid, where, being cut off from his line of retreat down the valley, his regiment, with part of another regiment, made their way through the mountains of West Virginia to Webster, on the B. & O. R. R., with a large lot of prisoners. He was in the battle of Monocacy, where his command lost heavily, and in front of Washington in the repulse of Early; and from there to the James River; and in front of Petersburg. And when mustered out on expiration of term of service, received a certificate of thanks for honorable service from Abraham Lincoln. In the fall of 1864, he re-enlisted in the One Hundred and Eighty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and served with his command in Kentucky and Cumberland Gap, and operated against bushwhackers, and at one engagement at Mount Sterling, and was mustered out in September, 1865. After the war he returned home and engaged in farming, and in 1866, moved to Illinois, and came from there to Kansas, in 1872, locating on his present farm; and is the oldest and first settler in Lincoln Township. When he brought his family, consisting of his wife and two children, on his place it was quite dry, and not thinking of rains interfering with his plans, he built a dug-out to live in, two feet in the ground, and sod walls around the walls above the ground, and covered it with poles and sod. Shortly after moving in, he went to town and spent his last cent for groceries, flour and meal, and on his return home it commenced raining, and the water threatened his dug-out, so he began to bank against it. But it rose, and commenced running in, so he had to abandon it; and just at night he took one child and his wife the other, and started for a neighbors who had just put up a small board shanty; and in the heavy rain and darkness, after walking a mile, being guided by the flashes of lightning, they found it; and four families occupied the house that night. When he went back to the dug-out in the morning, he found that the rain had softened the walls and the roof had fallen in, thus destroying everything he had in the world, and leaving his family without anything to eat but ham, which lay on the top. He resorted to every imaginable resource to find food for his family. At one time the river rose so they could not cross, and the people on the south side came near starving to death, having nothing to eat but buffalo meat with no seasoning. Finally they got a skiff made to get over to the stores where Hutchinson now is. At one time, while on a buffalo hunt, the weather suddenly changed from warm to cold, with a terrible north wind, and he only got back to the settlement by the most vigorous measures, the cold being so intense that it caused the blood to gush from the nostrils of his horses as well as himself. He is now in very comfortable circumstances, owing to industry, energy and perseverance. Mr. S. was married March 21, 1866, to Miss Jennie B. Nee, a native of Ohio. They have two children—Lawrence and Percy. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church; also a Mason, Postmaster, and was senior steward of the Grand Lodge, in 1881. He is a general farmer, but makes a specialty of raising a fine quality of wheat, selling a large portion of it from his place for seed. Had wheat that averaged in 1882, forty bushels to the acre, and the gross yearly average for the same ground has been twenty-three and a half bushels per acre. Has 16 head of cattle, 30 hogs, 3 horses and 2 mules. He was born in Pennsylvania in 1845, and removed to Baltimore County, Md., with his parents in 1851. He was raised on a farm and has made farming his life occupation, living on the same place until 1873, when he came West, and after traveling through different States for two years, he finally located here in 1875, and is satisfied with his judgment, as he has been successful and has a model farm, and thinks this will prove a good fruit country, and that the seasons are improving and the rain fall more regular. He was married November 29, 1881, to Miss Mary E. Young, a native of Alton, Ill. They have one child—Edwin. He is a member of the Anti-Horse-Thief Association, and the Farmers' Alliance.

GEOGRAPHICAL AND DESCRIPTIVE.

SEDGWICK County embraces the territory between the north line of Township 25 and the south line of Township 26 south, and the east line of Range 2 east and the west line of Range 4 west of the sixth principal meridian, except in Townships 25 and 26, along which the west line of Range 3 west is the western boundary. The center of the county is about 150 miles from the eastern, 250 from the western, 180 from the northern and 48 from the southern line of the State; 129 miles on an air line, from Topeka, 185 from Atchison and Leavenworth, 190 from Kansas City, and 145 from Fort Scott.

The land is about equally divided between bottom and upland, the general surface being only slightly undulating. The average width of the bottoms is about five miles. There is but little timber; probably not more than one per cent; but the timber law, the thrift of the people, and the ease with which timber is cultivated, will in a few years materially change this status.

The soil is a black (some places red or mulatto) loam, intermingled somewhat in the bottoms with sand. It is easily pulverized, good crops often being produced from the sod, an advantageous feature to new beginners. The principal streams are the Arkansas River, a wide and shallow but swift stream, entering the county at the northwest corner and leaving it near the southeast corner; the Little Arkansas, entering the county at the center of the north line, running almost due south and emptying into the larger stream at Wichita; and the Ninnescah, running through the southwest corner of the county. In addition to these are Cowskin, Clearwater, Wildcat, Chisholm, Gypsum and other smaller streams. A large portion of the bed of the Arkansas at times is apparently dry, but the water soaks into the sandy soil and runs under the ground. Probably the width of the valley and this sub-irrigation is a great benefit, especially in extremely dry seasons

Wheat, corn and oats are the principa[illegible]uctions of the soil.

EARLY HISTORY.

The people of Sedgwick County would be destitute of the romantic sentiments that possess the average citizen of historical Kansas if they did not believe that the legendary Coronado had once beheld the glories of their beautiful land. It is, of course, claimed that Wichita was a point on the route of the celebrated march of that adventurer. The French explorer, M. Du Tissenet, who is known to have touched the soil of Kansas in 1719 while on an exploring expedition beyond the Mississippi, under the direction of Bienville, Governor of Louisiana, also, of course, beheld the stars from his camp on the banks of the Arkansas, within the present boundaries of Sedgwick County. It is claimed, too, that Kit Carson, the noted Indian hunter, camped in 1827 near the junction of the two rivers for several weeks. The first bona fide white settler in Sedgwick County was C. C. Arnold, who came here, in 1857, with a party of hunters, and who has remained in the county, with the exception of short intervals, ever since. Mr. Arnold came from Coffey County and his companions were Ed. S. Moseley, Mr. Maxley, Thompson Crawford, Robert Dunlap, Robert Durackin and Jacob Cary. Maxley and Moseley located a "ranch" or Indian trading post on the Little Arkansas, a short distance above the present site of Wichita. The others built a cabin and cultivated a little land on what now constitutes William T. Jewett's farm on the Arkansas River, on the old town site of Park City. Their especial business was that of capturing buffalo cows and calves for eastern parks and traveling menageries. Maxley was drowned in the Kansas River in 1864. Moseley had previously taken a claim in Wilson County, and, having entered it, moved into Humboldt, Allen County, and engaged in the butchering business. In the fall of 1863 or spring of 1864, he returned to his first love and again became a trader and Nimrod; his last scene of active life being laid at Medicine Lodge and the surrounding country, and but a short time after leaving Humboldt, he was murdered by Osage Indians. Next in order, disputing with C. C. Arnold the first settlership, was John Ross, a farmer, who, in 1860, came into Sedgwick County and settled upon what is now the Jewett farm, eight miles northeast of Wichita. Mr. Ross removed from Wilson County with his wife and children, built a house and began the work of a farmer. He was murdered in June of the same year; supposed to have been done by a band of Osage Indians that came into the valley on a hunting expedition from the Neosho River.

In the fall of 1863, J. R. Mead, who lived at Towanda, Butler County, established a trading post on what is now the site of Wichita, where he traded with the Indians for several years. In the spring of 1869, he removed his family from Towanda to his claim in Sedgwick County, and has ever since been a resident of this county. This section of the Arkansas Valley, during the early days of Mr. Mead's residence, was the hunter's paradise. During a period of three weeks, assisted by two employes, he killed 330 buffalo, saved 300 hides and 3,500 pounds of tallow, realizing from their labor the sum of $400, and killing, in addition, considerable other game, including a large number of antelope and one elk, which they killed only five miles up the Little River, from its mouth. One afternoon, in two hours, he killed thirty-five buffalo, and saved the tallow of eleven, himself. Early in the spring of 1864, the Wichita Indians and affiliating tribes, who had been driven from the Indian Territory in the winter of 1861-62, and who had made temporary homes in Woodson County, removed from there and established a camp at the mouth of the Little Arkansas. The name of their camp was Wichita, from which the present city of Wichita derived its name. These Indians engaged in peaceful avocations, cultivating and harvesting large fields of corn and vegetables. They remained until the fall of 1867, when they returned south. With the Wichitas came Jesse Chisholm, a half-breed Cherokee, and an adopted member of the Wichitas. He built his house on the stream which derived its name from him, east of the present city of Wichita, and moved into it with his family. He also established a "ranch" between the two rivers, three miles above their junction, near the present residence of J. C. Davis. In the spring of 1865, Mr. Chisholm located a trail from his "ranch" to the present site of the Wichita Agency, on the Wichita River, Indian Territory, distance 220 miles. This trail subsequently became, and is still known as the "Chisholm Trail," It was established for the purpose of enabling the traders in the Arkansas Valley to obtain wagon communication with the Indians in the Indian Territory, and the trail was used by these traders for years in the transportation of merchandise to tribes in the Territory. Afterward the trail was used by Texas cattle drivers, and is now used by the Government in the transportation of supplies to Fort Sill, forty miles south of the Wichita Agency. The principal points on this trail are Wichita, Clearwater, Caldwell, Pond Creek, Skeleton Ranch, Buffalo Springs, mouth of Turkey Creek, Cheyenne Agency, Wichita Agency and Fort Sill. Chisholm died on the north fork of the Canadian River, in the Indian Territory, March 4, 1868, of cholera morbus, caused by eating bear's grease that had been poisoned by being melted in a brass kettle.

In the year 1866, a treaty was made with the Arrapahoes and Cheyennes four miles up the Little Arkansas, near the present residence of Hon. E. P. Thompson. All the leading tribes were represented by their chiefs. The United States Commissioners were Generals Harney, and Sanborn, and Kit Carson. They were accompanied by Col. Bent, of Bent's Fort notoriety, and by several others from Washington, acting as clerks, guards, etc. The territory lying east of the Arkansas River was surveyed, during the year 1867, by Coryelle and Bowles, formerly clerks in one of the departments at Washington; that, west of the river by Col. S. S. Smoot, the following year.

Hon. William Greiffenstein came to Sedgwick County in the spring of 1865, and located on Cowskin Creek near the subsequent site of Gainesburg, engaged in trading with the Indians. He was very popular with the various tribes of Indians and well suited for his business. Charles Whittaker took a claim on the Little Arkansas, about eight miles above its mouth, in the spring of 1866. Durfee and Leedrick came in 1867 and started a ranch on the banks of the Little Arkansas, near the site of W. C. Woodman's present residence. Lewellen and Davis traded with the Indians here in 1866-67. Eli Waterman came in the year 1867, and in February, 1868, took a claim and subsequently entered it, of which, what is now Douglas avenue, in Wichita was the south line, and Lawrence avenue the east line. Among the arrivals of 1867 was Jack Lawton, who was in the employ of J. R. Mead, and who was murdered the same year by a desperado named Wells. Of the actual settlers of 1868, in the order of their settlement, is H. W. Vigus, who settled February 13, 1868, then J. R. Mead, who came over from Towanda, Butler County, in the spring of 1868, and settled upon the claim now known as Mead's addition to the city of Wichita. The first settler of that claim, however, was a border terror named Bill Whitman, who was killed in a drunken brawl by a man named Charley Corderie, who kept a groggery near the Little Arkansas at the north end of town. The same year came M. A. Sales and family, D. S. Munger, Milo B. Kellogg, John Allison, Charles Hunter, F. H. Dunlap (who settled in Park Township, in February, 1868), Harvey Dunlap, Robert and William Houston, David Edmunds, John D. Golyer, James French, David Wousick, Joseph Bert, John Gifford, George and Henry Clark, John and Mike Meagher, Walter Walker, wife and sister, Mrs. Hall and family, and Louis Fisher. A detachment of the Fifth United States Infantry was then stationed here, having its headquarters along the Little Arkansas, near the old fair grounds, and under command of Col. Samuel L. Barr. Among the soldiers who were discharged on expiration of service and became settlers here, were John Ward and James Mohen, sergeants; Charles Bush, private; Charles Corderie and John Hurt, scouts. During the year 1869 and the spring of 1870 came Daniel and Samuel Hoover, Charles Allison, John M. Steele, M. Lochard, the Teeters, William Polk, G. W. Smith, Charles Hill, John Peyton, William Matthewson, A. F. Greenway, H. E. Van Trees, Mrs. Everett, Mr. Hopkins, E. P. Thompson, the Sullivans, Reuben Riggs, Mrs. D. S. Munger and Henry C. Sluss.

The first child known to have been born in the county was Sedgwick Hoover, whose parents still reside in Wichita Township. He was born December 23, 1869. The first marriage occurred in the winter of 1869 70, the name of the man being Perry Eaton. The name of the woman is not known.

Sedgwick County was named in honor of Major-General John Sedgwick, who was killed May 9, 1864, at the battle of Spottsylvania, Va. The act establishing the county was approved February 26, 1867, and the boundaries were described as follows: Commencing at the northwest corner of Butler County, thence south to the southwest corner of same county, thence west to the west line of Range 4 west, thence north to the south line of Township 22, thence east to the place of beginning. By an act of the Legislature approved February 26, 1867, the counties of Sedgwick, Howard, Sumner, Hayes, Reno and Cowley were attached to Butler County for judicial purposes. D. S. Munger was appointed the first Justice of the Peace. In November, 1868, the first election was held, and thirty-five votes were cast. The election was held for school purposes, with the following results: M. A. Sayles, Trustee; H. W. Vigus, Clerk; S. B. Floyd, Treasurer. The mother of Mr. Sayles was elected Superintendent of Public Instruction. The proceedings were informal, and nothing resulted therefrom. In October, 1869, an organization of the county was attempted, conventions having been called, tickets placed in nomination and an election held. A part of the history of that election is lost, as far as the official records are concerned. Col. D. M. V. Stuart, of Park City, was elected to the Legislature; Minnard Hall, Sheriff; H. W. Vigus and T. H. Dunlap two of the Commissioners. This election was declared void by the Governor, owing to informalities and irregularities. A census was then taken, and the result forwarded to Topeka, and, it being ascertained the county had the requisite number of inhabitants, the Governor, in the winter of 1869-70, appointed S. C. Johnson, William Lockard and Henry Stein, Commissioners, with power to complete the organization. The Commissioners appointed John Ward, County Clerk, and divided the county into three districts. They also called an election in April, for county officers and the permanent location of the county seat, Wichita having been temporarily selected. This election, and the canvass preceding it, was one of the most exciting ever held in the county, involving, as it did, a county seat contest, as well as an election for officers. Wichita won the race for county seat over its competitor, Park City, though it was impossible to decide which place received the greatest number of fraudulent votes. From the fact that the friends of Park City gracefully submitted, it is evident that they were not disposed to "first cast a stone." The following officers were elected at that April election: N. A. English, T. S. Floyd and Alex. McWilliams, County Commissioners; J. M. Steele, County Clerk; F. J. Fulton, County Attorney; L. F. Buttles, Register of Deeds; D. A. Bright, Clerk District Court; Reuben Riggs, Probate Judge; W. N. Walker, Sheriff; S. C. Johnson, Treasurer; John Price Hilton, Superintendent of Schools; William Finn, Surveyor; E. B. Allen, Coroner. The total vote was 260. J. M. Steele and H. E. Vantrees were chosen Justices of the Peace; Wm. Smith, Trustee, and I. S. Elder, Constable of Wichita Township.

In June, 1870, the first term of the district court was held in the upper story of a livery stable, in Wichita, Hon. W. R. Brown presiding. W. N. Walker officiated as Sheriff; T. J. Fulton, County Attorney, and E. S. Roe, Deputy Clerk. The resident attorneys were H. C. Sluss, Reuben Riggs and P. T. Weeks. The first meeting of the County Commissioners was held the 27th of April, 1871. The first official act was the granting of a dram shop license. The first county order issued was in favor of T. S. Floyd. In October, 1870, occurred the first regular fall election for county officers and a representative in the Legislature, the result of which, and all subsequent elections, will be found in a table published elsewhere in this sketch.

During the year 1870 immigration poured into the county rapidly. The Osage Trust Lands embraced the territory of the county as far north as the north line of the second of the southern tiers of sections, in Township 26, a little over four miles north of the northern limits of the present site of Wichita, and, for contiguity to the embryo city, the principal settlements were made on these lands.

By an act of the legislature, approved February 29, 1872, the county of Harvey was established. The ten southern townships of this county, being two-thirds of the area of the whole county, were taken from the northern portion of Sedgwick. At the same time, five townships were detached from the western portion of Sedgwick County and added to Reno. The territory detached at this time from Sedgwick County was five hundred and forty square miles, the same number included in the present limits of Harvey County. The friends of Wichita, Newton and Hutchinson were responsible for this depletion of the territory of Sedgwick, and the formation of the new county of Harvey. These changes insured, as was designed, permanent county seats to all these points.

October 13, 1870, a proposition was voted upon by the people of the county, and carried by a majority of 317, to issue bonds of the county, to the amount of $200,000 and subscribe the same to the capital stock of one of the four following railroads, which should be the first completed to Wichita, viz: Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, Kansas City, Burlington & Santa Fe, Fort Scott, Humboldt & Western, or the St. Joseph & Wichita. In June, 1871, the Wichita & Southwestern Railroad Company was organized, with J. R. Mead, president; William Greiffinstein, treasurer; H. C. Sluss, secretary; Solomon H. Kohn, J. M. Steele, S. C. Johnson, G. H. Smith, George Schlieter, C. F. Gilbert, T. J. Peter, R. W. P. Muse, and F. J. Fulton, the balance of the directors. On the 11th of August, 1871, the county voted $200 000 in bonds to aid in the construction of the road, which was completed to the city, May 16, 1872. On the 8th of June, following, the first shipment of cattle (eighteen car loads) was made. It is estimated that during the year 1871, 800,000 head of Texas cattle were driven through Sedgwick County.

March, 15, 1873, the Sedgwick County Agricultural Society was organized; with officers as follows: A. T. Somesbury, president; D. L. Green, vice-president; R. L. West, secretary; W. R. Smith, treasurer and George Salisbury, reporter. September 4, 1873, the Sedgwick and Harvey County bond case was decided, the townships formerly in Sedgwick County being required to assume payment of $76,000 and the interest thereon. September 30, 1873, was the commencement of the first annual exhibition of the Sedgwick County Agricultural Society, closing October 4.

November 12, 1874, the county jail was completed. This was a disastrous year for the county and State. An unusual drouth prevailed, and such vegetation as was left, was swept away by innumerable swarms of grasshoppers or locusts. In 1875, there were abundant rain showers and bountiful harvests. In 1876, grasshoppers again visited the county, damaging crops. In 1877, the crops were generally good. February 22, 1878, occurred the first reunion of the Old Settlers' Association, at Eagle Hall, Wichita.

In 1880, the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad was completed to Wichita, and the Arkansas Valley Agricultural Society was organized, with C. S. Eichholtz, president, and W. H. Ranson, secretary. In May of this year $155,980 of the bonded indebtedness of the county was wiped out.

The following is a list of the postoffices in the county: Afton, Blendon, Clarion, Clearwater, Coronado, Diana, Eldridge, El Paso, Fayette, Ferris, Good River, Germania, Greenwich, Haysville, Herald, Helen, Iowaville, Lamont, Marshall, Mount Hope, Mulvane (the town is mainly in Sumner County), Magnolia, Ohio Center, Peotone, Ruby, Sunny Dale, St. Mark, Valley Center, Venice, Waco and Wichita.

TOWNSHIP SKETCHES.

Afton.—Afton township was organized in October, 1874, by William Lyman, at present postmaster at Afton. The first settler was Albert Southard, who built a house and opened a farm in 1872. The township is watered by Afton Creek and Clear Creek, with several branches of each. It is rolling prairie, producing good crops in favorable seasons, both corn and wheat. Its present population is 262. Its total tax assessment $95.174.

Attica.—The first settlers located in 1869 and the spring of 1870, among them David Boggs, C. Hester, Henry Shorts, John Gorman, Henry Schwitzer (now of Wichita), Aaron Siever, Jas. Wenderman, W. D. Strong, A. M. Auld, Aaron Green, E. Aldrich, A. H. McConahie, Samuel Speer, A. G. Valentine, and Messrs. McGee, Briggs, McDonald, Dongan, Preston, Russell and Owen, with their families. Closely following them came Miles, Majors, Reese, Knoflock, Leslie, Holmes, Stewart, Shaffers, Dyt, McClelland, Curtis, Wykoff, Anderson, Chirington, Rochelle, Roder, Osborne, Ogden, Davidson, McCalya, Cooper, Dennis, Heighrie, Rogers, Coleman, Flood, Rosenstiel and Kelly—present Hon. John—and the families of all the above. The township was organized in 1873. It is watered by Dry Creek (not always dry), and branches of the classic Cowskin. The surface is undulating, the soil a rich black loam, producing good crops in seasonable years. There are three church organizations, two Sabbath schools, and a free library, located at Blendon postoffice. Present population, 514; present valuation, $190,920.

Delano.—A. E. and E. Dodge were the first bona fide settlers of this township, having come prior to the year 1870, though Isaac Walker took the claim at the West Wichita end of the bridge some time in 1869, so the honor could easily be disputed; however settlers came rapidly early in 1870, among them, John McCormick, Richard Farmer, R. E. Lawrence, G. E. Kirkpatrick and S. W. Richmond, all of whom still reside upon their original claims, saving Mr. Farmer, who we trust has found quite as pleasant a climate whither he has gone, over the river, but not the Big Arkansas. The township was organized in 1871, by P. McDonald. The soil is rich, most of it bottom land. It is well watered by the Arkansas and Cowskin. The bottoms are sub-irrigated, and often produce thirty bushels of wheat to the acre, and as high as eighty bushels of corn. It boasts of two church organizations, a Presbyterian and Methodist, also the legendary West Wichita. Population, 631; valuation of property, $219,751.

Erie.—Erie Township was first called Fayette, but changed in 1878. It is watered by Mud Creek, Jocelyn Creek and Sand Creek, besides having many prairie ponds distributed in various localities, furnishing abundance of water for stock purposes, which is largely the pursuit of its people, though excellent crops are raised, and fruit does well. The soil is a dark loam, capable of fine crops, which could be produced to profit by deep plowing. Its first actual settler was Samuel Elkins, but among its active early pioneers were Wm. Embree, Milton W. Tyler, M. A. Swift, M. Davison (blacksmith and preacher), G. Vesey, A. T. Buckeridge, O. H. S. Bartlett and Henry Newton; the last named organized the township. It has several good schoolhouses, wherein church is held by circuit preachers, each Sabbath. Helen postoffice, located on the southwest quarter of Section 9, is surrounded by finely improved farms. Population, 166; valuation of property, $74.505.

Eagle.—Eagle Township was organized January 9, 1872. It was named in honor of the Wichita Eagle, it is located north of Park and a little west of north from the confluence of the two rivers; is watered by the Big Arkansas, and is one of the best townships in the county. Its grain producing as well as stock raising industries, are fast coming to the front rank of townships; besides it boasts of several of the finest orchards in the county. Embracing parts of three ranges, 1, 2 and 3 west, it gets with it alike capabilities for farming and stock raising. Population 551; valuation of property, $205,732.

Grant.—Grant Township is settled mostly by old soldiers, and named in honor of the General. Alexander Jester was the first settler, and located with his family upon the banks of what was called Jester Creek (since changed to Badger), as early as January, 1868. In the fall of 1870, he left his family and went to Indiana on his annual predatory excursion; returning he met a sixteen year-old boy enroute West, who was in possession of a good team, some money, a trunk and a silver watch. Jester, acting in a totally different capacity from what his name would imply, worked into the confidence of the boy. Gaining it the more readily owing to his old age, and then assuming the role of guide and protector to the poor boy, he allured him to this valley one night, and brutally murdered him with an axe while asleep at their camp fire in Missouri. He burned the body but preserved the effects, coming through Wichita a month afterwards with the boy's team, trunk, etc., and going to his place. Word reached here a few days after; he was arrested and sent back to Missouri, where he broke jail, and was afterwards killed among a band of outlaws, while attempting to rob a wagon train. His wife and family, a boy and two girls, scattered, and have all since died. There were pioneers in Grant Township, however, as early as the spring of 1870; among them were Scott Thomas, D. R. Allen, Ruleson, the blacksmith, S. J. Perrin, O. G. Jacobs, Chris. Pringle, the Ayers. All are still living in Grant except Allen, who resides in Wichita. Ruleson was probably the first to settle after Jester, in Grant Township. Valley Center, now grown to be quite an important village, doing a fine grain and stock trade, with depot, elevator and several good stores, several good church organizations, a fine school edifice, etc., is located in Grant Township. The township is watered by the Little Arkansas, Badger Creek, and the head waters of Chisholm Creek. The soil is very productive, lies mostly in the beautiful valley of the Little Arkansas, or with a valley slope approaching the uplands, which produces nearly equal to the bottom farms, while greatly superior in the matter of fruit culture; one of the finest orchards in the State, that of Mr. McCracken, is upon the uplands of Grant Township, Sedgwick County. Grant Township has eight schoolhouses, and boasts of a handsome park, dark with shade trees, and seats, platforms, etc., arranged for speaking, dancing or celebrating. Population, 891; valuation of property, $340,066.

Gypsum.—Gypsum Township boasts of some of the best producing and finest improved farms in the county. It was first settled by Joseph Gifford, who came here in 1868, and was organized March 2, 1871. Of its early pioneers still engaged in cultivating its soil, are John Dolon, William Sweeney, J. K. Crabb, M. Clapham, the Staffords and L. Bronson. Several fine orchards returning rich yields of fruit, are already there as vouchers for that crop, while corn has averaged from fifty to sixty bushels to the acre in favorable seasons. The township is abundantly watered by tributaries of the Arkansas River, Spring Creek, Spring Branch, Dry Creek, Polecat and Eightmile Creek. It has seven schoolhouses, two or three church organizations and a well reputed literary society. Vegetables of all kinds can be raised with profit. Population, 597; valuation of property, $285,210.

Greeley.—Greeley Township was first settled by J. Lumbert in 1871. Among its best known citizens still claiming it as their home, are A. M. Durand, G. Herendon, D. M. Anderson, William Daily, W. J. Collier, W. C. Brown and H. E. Heisserman. All the above named gentlemen were pioneers, following closely upon Mr. Lumbert in their settlement. The township was named after the lamented editor of the New York Tribune. It is watered by the Arkansas River, which runs the length of its northern boundary, giving it some of the finest valley land in the county. The soil is a rich black loam, producing alike, splendid corn and wheat, and is valuable for its fine orchards, great and excellent varieties of its fruit, while it cannot be surpassed for stock raising. The postoffice, Mount Hope, is in the northwest corner of the township. It has an agricultural store, two stocks of general merchandise, and a blacksmith shop, all doing a fair business. There are four good schoolhouses and three church organizations, the Christians, Methodists and Congregationalists, having an average attendance of fifty each. The township was organized in 1872. Population, 455; valuation of property, $157,060.

Garden Plain.—Garden Plain Township, lying directly west of Wichita about twelve miles, is the center of a very fine agricultural region. Its earliest settlers were U. B. Bryan, John Fletcher, and O. S. Northrop. The township is watered by several tributaries of the Ninnescah River, among them Clear Creek and Polecat. The township has a fine church organization, the Mount Olive Baptist, besides circuit preaching in several schoolhouses. Lamont is the postoffice. School districts Nos. 8, 37 and 77, each have fine comfortable buildings and are arranged with reference to settlements, so as to afford the greatest convenience to scholars as to distance. N. M. Southwick organized it, and has one of the finest improved farms west of Wichita, with fine orchards, grove and convenient outbuildings, barn, granary, etc., aside from a good residence building. Garden Plain is as well adapted to stock raising and fruit raising. Crops of all kinds are grown with profit in season. The township was organized in July, 1874. Population, 399; valuation of property, $111,300.

Grand River.—Grand River is located in Range 4, on the western line of the county. It is abundantly watered by the Ninnescah River with its several branches, besides numerous tributaries. It is a paradise for stock raising, while its bottom lands produce as good crops as the Arkansas River bottom lands. Sheep, naturally, do well in this township. David Moore was the first white settler. He located with his family at what was known as "Lone Tree Ranch," an ofttime halting place for freighters, hunters and frontiersmen. The township was organized by A. A. Barlow, whose farm lies joining Marshall, quite a flourishing little village. Marshall boasts of several good stores, carrying stocks of general merchandise, besides a good water flour mill, blacksmith and wagon shop, broom factory, livery stable and hotel. Among the oldest and best known of its settlers, are J. E. Williams, Dr. Shannon, Ira Lamphere, R. Saunders, S. S. Casad, and the Richey brothers. The Methodist, Baptist and Disciple churches have each a fine organization. There are four school districts, each with a substantial building, arranged so as to be easily accessible to the greatest number. The township was organized in 1876. Population, 396; valuation of property, $98.345.

Illinois.—Illinois Township was first settled by William Spencer, who located in 1871. In 1872, the Ralphs, William Dexter, James Dugan, E. E. Basher and J. R. Booth came; and in the spring of 1870, J. D. Nessly (who organized the township the same year), J. M. Lane, William Walton, James Sackett and Barnett. The majority of the first settlers came from Illinois, and gave the name to the township. The soil and products do not differ from the best uplands of the county. Wheat and corn do well, fruit also. The township is watered by Dry Creek, and numerous springs are a spontaneous offering to enhance the value as a stock raising region. The township was organized in 1873. Population, 359; valuation of property, $124.996.

Kechi.—Kechi was first settled by John Allison, as early as the fall of 1868. L. Dunlap settled with his family in the winter of the same year. In July, 1869, the three Sullivan boys, Charles E., William R. and George G., made their settlement, coming from Arizona by wagon. Charles organized the township in 1871. In May, 1870, the balance of the Sullivan family came, consisting of father, mother, three other brothers, two son-in-laws and a sister. All are still living in Kechi, except the elder Sullivan, who died in 1872. E. P. Thompson, who represented Sedgwick County in the Kansas House of Representatives in 1874, removed to this township from Topeka in 1870, with his family, having selected his farm early in 1869. Population, 614; valuation of property, $226,230.

Lincoln.—The first actual settler in this township was Henry Engot, a native of Switzerland, who settled in what is now Lincoln Township, in 1870.

Among those who came shortly after but during the same year, 1870, were Samuel L. Bowers and T. B. McCormick. In 1871, came Oren Smith, W. H. Yazel, William J. Wallace, W. C. Woods, George Lent, Phillip Osman and W. H. Ayers. The township was organized in 1871. It is the extreme northeastern corner of the county, and embodies some of the finest land and best improved farms in the State of Kansas. It is celebrated for its fine and thrifty orchards. Wheat, corn, vegetables, briefly, any product incident to this soil and climate, can be profitably raised there. Watered by Wild Cat and Prairie Branch, besides an abundance of ponds and springs. The postoffices are at Clarion and Edgecomb. Clarion is in the center and Edgecomb in the northeast corner of the township. Four good schoolhouses are impartially distributed to meet the educational wants of its thrifty people. Three church organizations, having circuit preachers, with each a full membership, also grace the township. Population, 509; valuation of property, $140,605.

Morton.—This township was organized in 1875, by E. C. Gobin. It was first settled by George W. Walters, in 1870, at present one of the Commissioners of Sedgwick County. At an early day he kept a country supply store for cattle men and traders, but subsequently he engaged in agricultural pursuits, and is still following the same. J. B. Brickhouse, formerly a groceryman at Wichita, became an early settler of Morton, and was kept in the office of Justice of the Peace until 1881, when he was succeeded by Mr. Gobin. Mr. Brickhouse is now Postmaster at Finley. The country is well adapted to stock raising, and fine stock ranges abound. The township is well watered by both branches of the Ninnescah, besides Spring and Mud creeks. Population, 478; valuation of property, $81,082.

Minneha.—Minneha joins Wichita Township on the east, and is undoubtedly one of the very best townships in the county. Its settlement dates as far back as 1870, when W. D. Highly settled with his family upon Section 30, where he still is, engaged in farming and stock raising. Con. Ludlum and William Baldwin were settlers of 1870 also. Among the settlers of 1871 were, R. T. Leach, J. Zody, P. S. Crum, David Fox, J. S. Shank and John Hass. The township was organized in October, 1871, one of the first organized in the county. With the exception of Wichita Township, it probably contains the best farm improvements of any other township in the county. Fine houses, barns, orchards and hedges abound throughout Minneha. It is watered by Gypsum Creek, Four-mile and Spring Creek, with numerous tributaries from a variety of springs. The soil is very productive, and all crops, field or garden, seldom fail of bringing the husbandman a full compensation for his labor. The St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad runs through the township, with a station inside its limits called Manchester. It has four good schoolhouses and three church organizations. Population, 469; valuation of property, $192,469.

Ninnescah.—Ninnescah is one of the southern tier of townships bordering upon Sumner County. It is watered by the river from which it derived its name, and is rich in fine bottom lands and in a large belt of timber. The soil is equal to the Arkansas River bottom lands, but its valley is not so extensive. Some of the finest improved and best producing farms in the county are in this township. Its uplands afford the best of pasture, and are well adapted either for farming or stock raising. Fruit culture is largely and successfully engaged in, in this township.

Hon. William Ross, organized the township in October, 1872. The first officers were Thomas W. McCreadie, Trustee; J. G. Dunscomb, Treasurer; J. M Tracey, Clerk; William Ross and F. Summers, Justices. The first settler was Edward Murray, a native of the County Down, Ireland, who located in the winter of 1869. He got out material for a "stockade ranch," on the north bank of the Ninnescah. He then left, and returning in April, 1870, found his claim occupied by Charley Smith, to whom he gave the material. Smith then completed what was known afterwards as the "Ninnescah Ranch." Jacob Swinddinger, known as "Dutch Jake," occupied it some time, and then Bob Lytle, a noted frontiersman, became Smith's partner. They sold to McLean & Russell, and for two years it was the rendezvous for all the desperados along the border. In 1872, J. G. Dunscomb bought them out and they left for Bluff Creek, Sumner County, where McLean came near being lynched with Bill Brooks, George Smith and others, whom the "vigilance" hung just west of Wellington. McLean escaped by interference of several to whom he had done favors in times gone. Murray located on the south side of the river and is still there. William Ross located with his family, August 10th. On the 18th he cleared off about four rods of the river bottom, stirred it with a pitchfork and sowed turnip seeds. About the 15th of November, 300 Osage Indians, on an annual hunt and drunk, camped in the bottom and harvested the first crop. The arrivals up to the last of August, were Messrs. Ingenine and family, Sohn, Cramer, Summers, West and Bright. In September the arrivals were Messrs. McCreadil, Brown, Stafford, Lane, Smith and Spicer. John Stewart came in March, 1871, and his son's is claimed as the first birth in the township. The first death was among the horse thieves at Smith & Lytle's ranch. Rev. J. P. Harson, assisted by Elder H. W. Lawrence, organized the first church (Presbyterian) February 3, 1874. The Ninnescah has numerous tributaries that afford an abundance of water, aside from the river. The postoffices are at Good River and Clearwater, the last mentioned having a very extensive store of general merchandise, besides a blacksmith shop. Four schoolhouses and a Presbyterian Church edifice, the latter on A. H. Mann's farm, are other features not unimportant. A. E. Chambers has a race park on his farm, and handles fine stock. Population, 350; valuation of property, $153,515.

Ohio.—Ohio Township was named in honor of the modern father of heroes, statesmen and presidents. Its first settlers were in majority, from Ohio, and organized the township, with that name, March 8, 1873. It lies upon the line of Sumner County, east of Ninnescah Township and is watered by Spring Creek, several tributaries of the Ninnescah and numerous fine springs. E. H. Brown was its first settler, having arrived in 1870. The Andersons came in 1871, also William Dyer. Ohio is ranked among the best townships, in the character, quality and abundance of its products. It has some splendidly improved farms within its boundaries and is well known for its stock wealth. Ohio Center is the postoffice, and three good schoolhouses are conveniently located in the township. Population, 303; valuation of property, $117,644.

Park.—The first township settled was Park. It really seems to claim most of the earlier incidents narrated in an authentic history of Sedgwick County. It was in Park Township that Clint Arnold and his hunting party located. It was here the first farm settler, John Ross, built his cabin and where he met his tragic death. J. H. Dunlap settled there in February, 1868. Besides, Park city was organized by a town company before Wichita was named, and it was designed not only for the county seat town, but for the metropolis of the valley. It was not organized as a township until May 2d, 1871, and then by W. W. Turner. Park is watered by both the Big and the Little Arkansas rivers—an island almost. It is thoroughly irrigated by the undertow of both rivers, hence never fails of a crop, averaging some years seventy-five to eighty bushels of corn to the acre. All the other cereals, fruits and vegetables, grow abundantly and profitably. Population, 418. Total valuation of property, $124,908.

Payne.—This township was organized in the fall of 1870, and named in honor of its first settler, David L. Payne, who has obtained national celebrity from his connection with the movement to establish the Oklahoma colony in the Indian Territory. Captain Payne was the originator of the scheme and is still president of the Oklahoma Association. He was born December 30, 1838, in Fairmount, Grant Co., Ind., and was raised on a farm. He received a common school education. April 15, 1858, he arrived in Burr Oak Township, Doniphan Co., Kan., and engaged at once in the native lumbering business, which he followed until July 16, 1861, when he enlisted as a private in the Fourth Kansas Regiment of Infantry, which afterwards, in connection with the Third Kansas, became the Tenth Kansas. He served three years with this command in the capacity of a private, declining the offer of a Lieutenant's commission five times. In the Kansas Legislature of 1865 he represented one of the districts of Doniphan County, in the Lower House. In the spring of 1865 he joined General Hancock's Veteran Army corps, in which he served until honorably discharged after one year's service. In January, 1867, he was elected Sergeant-at-Arms of the Kansas State Senate, and served as such through that session. In the spring of 1867 he was appointed Postmaster at Fort Leavenworth, in which position he served personally from April, 1867, until July following, and by deputy until the following September. July 2, 1867, he joined the Eighteenth Kansas Cavalry Regiment, which was organized for six months service on the plains. He served through the campaign in the capacity of Captain of Company D. During the session of the Legislature of 1868 he filled this position as Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, to which he had been elected the previous session. In November, 1868, he joined the Nineteenth Regiment of Kansas Cavalry, another command organized for six months' service on the plains. In this regiment he was appointed Captain of Company H, in which position he served during the existence of the command. He was engaged in the campaign against the Cheyennes, in which was effected the rescue of Mrs. Morgan and Miss White, in March, 1869, on the headwaters of the Red River, in the Panhandle of Texas. These ladies had been captured from their homes on the Republican River, in Kansas, in the summer of 1868, by Cheyenne Indians, and had suffered all of the indignities and cruelties that the wild savage is capable of inflicting. During a portion of this campaign Captain Payne served as dispatch bearer for General Custer. April 5, 1870 he removed to Sedgwick County and established "Payne's Ranch" at the crossing of the old Santa Fe trail on Dry Creek, in what is now Payne Township. In the Legislature of 1872 he represented Sedgwick County in the Lower House. He was the author of the bill which passed at this session to remove the disabilities of Confederate soldiers in Kansas. From 1874 to 1879 he was Assistant Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives at Washington. In 1879 he served four months as Government Steamboat Inspector, his time being divided between Florida and Norfolk, Va. He returned to his home in Payne Township in April, 1880, and immediately organized the Oklahoma Colony, of which he was elected president, and still remains as such. He has been arrested and driven from the Indian Territory six times by United States troops, but he still believes that his cause is sustained by law and equity, and will not surrender his position until the question in dispute has been settled by the Supreme Court. His position is that the lands in the Indian Territory which have not been apportioned to Indian tribes are the sole property of the Government, and as such are subject to settlement by citizens of the United States. Captain Payne is six feet four inches in height and is a fine specimen of manly beauty. He is modest and unassuming, and has none of the appearances of a bravado. He has all of the qualifications for a frontier leader, being cool, courageous, cautious, honorable and thoroughly practical. In Sedgwick County, where he is best known, no man has made more warm friends than Captain David L. Payne. The first Justice of the Peace in Payne Township was Robert Wilson, who was appointed in July, 1870. The township is well watered. Greenwich is the postoffice. There are three good church organizations and five good school buildings in the township. Population, 519; valuation of property, $176,948.

Rockford.—Rockford was organized May 2, 1871, by George N. Litzenberg and George Huffbauer. The first settler was Henry Stein, in June, 1869, shortly followed by Mr. Frielinger and William Yanks. During the fall of 1869, and early in 1880, settlements were made by the following gentlemen: Messrs. Osborn, Eaton, Alexander, McWilliams, Snyder Bros., Garret, McGuire, Woodward (the first justice), Ohlson, Gerties, Putnam, the Tuckers, Cramers, Morrison, Kennedy, Barns, Huffbauer, Hough, Whaley, Burr, the Geoeduers, Minichs, Vance, the Marks, Fortner, Fridays, Armstrong, Goodacre, Dr. Fabrique and David Aley. The first postoffice was named Sanford, established in 1870. A saw-mill at that period made cottonwood lumber for $30 per 1,000 feet. Mr. Haubauer built the first frame house, hauling his lumber from Salina, 118 miles. The first birth in the township was Anna May Garret, who was born in 1870. A Methodist Church was organized in 1871, which has been in active operation ever since. The flourishing town of Derby, and likewise five schoolhouses, are in this township. Population, 700; valuation of property, $222.258.

Sherman.—Sherman Township, named after the General, joins Union on the west, and is near the extreme northwestern line of the county. It was organized in 1877. The Germans are largely settled in the eastern part of it. All the crops are produced abundantly, and stock raising is being successfully prosecuted. It is watered by tributaries of the Cowskin and the "Big Slough," which is rich in fine bottom land. Magnolia is the postoffice, and Germania, a flourishing little village, is on the southeastern line of the township. It has three schoolhouses, a Presbyterian and Catholic Church organization. Population, 386; valuation of property, $139,098.

Salem.—Salem was organized in 1871, by S. Dunkin. W. F. Ransom was the first settler. He located in November, 1869. C. B. Haskins, who was mustered out of service at Wichita, in 1869, located the second claim. J. W. Hubbles, Frank Dunkin and James M. Vigus located the same year. In 1870, came A. Dodge, W. Phillips, William Davis, Mr. Powers, S. Dunkin, J. A. Nelson and W. W. Hays. The township is well watered by the Cowskin Creek and its tributaries, while the Arkansas River is its eastern boundary. The township has three good flouring-mills, four schoolhouses, two good stores with postoffice at Hays' mill, where also is located the well known camp meeting and picnic grove. Corn, wheat, fruit and vegetables are staple products of Salem, while it probably furnishes more stock for the market than any other township in the county. Population, 604; valuation of property, $164 107.

Union.—Union was first settled by Henry Pate and his four sons, in 1869. Early in 1870, the Rhodes, Rutledges, Smiths, Hohns and Burr, settled. Shortly after, the Browns, Packards, Imblees, Minturn and Manamee. The settlements were so rapid that in 1872 all the land in the township had been pre-empted. The township was organized in 1872, by E. A. Dorsey. It is a magnificent body of land, unlimited is to its crop producing qualities, as is abundantly testified by the magnificent farms of the Germans, who settled in the eastern portion of the township. In field crops and fruit, it has no superior in Southern Kansas. It is watered by the Arkansas River, the "Big Slough" and the Cowskin. Eldridge and Ferris are the postoffices. It has fine educational facilities, and is the largest in area of any township in the county. Population, 1,015; value of property, $318,335.

Viola.—Viola was first settled by C. Wood Davis and his two sons, who located in May, 1870. Theirs was the first frame residence in all the valley of the Ninnescah. Charles D. Davis organized the township in 1876, so Viola is the centennial township of the county. S. W. and S. O. Sackett located in 1871, as did Capt. W. S. White (of the Wichita Beacon), his brother Norman, and their mother. Viola is abundantly watered by the Ninnescah, Clearwater and Sand Creek. It is splendidly adapted to stock raising, owing to its numerous streams, while the bottom lands produce every crop with profit. Nearly every quarter section has an orchard. Population, 251; valuation of property, $109,542.

Waco.—Waco was settled as early as 1870. The name of the first settler cannot be ascertained. Mr. Jesse had a trading ranch on the Cowskin at an early day. Babcock and Wemple had a trading post on the same stream in 1871. Captain Wemple was one of the first settlers on the Cowskin. Among the early pioneers who have profited and made beautiful homes and fruitful farms, out of the rich deposits in the soil of Waco Township are, Nupus Blood, Simpson, O'Mealy, Owens, Barnett, W. H. and Melville Ranson, Cartwright, Balch, Robbins, Morgan, Hucklebridge, Weir, Wycoff, Bigelow, Snyder, Duncan, Mitchell, Dunn, McKee, Hazen and Wilson. There are seven schoolhouses; three Methodist organizations and one Baptist. It is watered by the Arkansas, Cowskin and Dry Creek, with numerous tributaries. The eastern part of the township, averaging four miles in width, is sub-irrigated, never failing to produce a crop, making it one of the most desirable, as well as richest soil regions in the county. Corn is the main crop, though wheat and other grains do well; also vegetables, while its fruit producing qualities are unsurpassed. A great many farmers have, of late years, turned their attention to successful stock raising. The township was organized on May 2, 1871, by Charles E. Goodyear, one of the first settlers in this valley. Population, 694; valuation of property, $265,387.

Wichita.—Wichita was organized 1870, by A. T. Lonsberry. Probably the first settler who built within the limits of Wichita Township, was Jesse Chisholm, a half breed, who came here with a band of Wichita Indians, in 1864, and built a cabin and trading post on the creek called after his name. What is now the township limits was, until 1869, the frequent resort of frontiersmen and hunters, coming and going as interest diverted them. But in 1869, the pioneer settlers began to seek this valley. Among them were: Doc. Lewellan, C. C. Allison, George E. Clark, John Ward, J. L. Rowton, James Eaman, David and Samuel Hoover, John Falkenstein, Isaac Elder, Charles W. Hill John Meagher and father, Charles Hunter, Caleb Teter and William L. Polk, Following closely, and in the spring of 1870, came A. J. Cook, William Finn, J. S. Mitchell, A. T. Lonsberry, George Lamphere, J. B. Fenton, N. A. English, Julius Johnson, Harry Smith, Joshua Smith, William Smith and others. The first bridge constructed in the county was built by labor subscription, the total cash outlay being ten dollars. It was built upon the site of the one now spanning Chisholm Creek, at the northeast suburb of the city. The first and second school districts then included the entire county. Buffalo, deer and antelope were to be had within sight. The entire township is valley, with the exception of a few sections on the rise east of Chisholm Creek. It is sub-irrigated and is unqualifiedly the garden spot of Kansas. It never fails, with proper care, to produce a crop, and withstands the severest droughts. A confirmation of this is, that in 1868, during the prevalence of hot winds that caused a failure of crops throughout the State, army officers, at Fort Hays, unable to procure even hay for their animals, sent down men and tools to cut hay in this valley, and to procure vegetables from the Indian women, whose "squaw patches" are yet traceable between the rivers and upon Greiffenstein's land, north of the city. The township abounds in elegant farm houses, barns, granaries, and is a wilderness of well-cared-for orchards, bearing an abundance and variety of fruit. Grapes and peaches are prolific, while vegetables of all kinds succeed well. Truly here "you have but to tickle the ground with a hoe, and it laughs into a crop." The township has four schoolhouses. Each district has a church organization. It is watered by the two Arkansas rivers and Chisholm Creek, with a race on the north carrying the waters of the Little Arkansas into Chisholm Creek, the latter emptying into the Big Arkansas, a few miles south of town. A fine water power has thus been created that might run, if properly handled, mills for a number of manufactories. A large flouring mill, built by H. W. Lewis, has been in active operation for over a year, upon one of the many sites this grand water privilege affords. Population, 931; valuation of property, $331,940.

MURDERS AND TRAGICAL EVENTS.

October, 1860, John Ross, the first white man who settled in Sedgwick County, with a family, was murdered by Osage Indians, together with his hired man. The following account of the tragedy is given by Hon. J. R. Mead: "One day in October, Ross, with his hired man and team, crossed the river, to hunt buffalo, and get a load of meat, going in the direction of Cowskin grove, and leaving his wife and children at home. Night came on and he did not return. All the next day his wife watched anxiously for his return—in vain. By a passing hunter, word was sent to Walnut Creek that Ross was missing. About twenty horsemen collected in that settlement and came over. All the next day they scoured the prairie west of the river, but found nothing of the missing man. The following day the search was renewed. In the afternoon, one of the party found a human leg, with a boot on. At a short distance Ross's head was found. Diligent search resulted in nothing more. These remains were taken to the now desolate home, and buried on the bank of the river, near the house, and hunters brought and piled stones upon the grave. And there reposes all that remains of John Ross, the first settler of Sedgwick County."

February 28, 1871, John Ledford was killed in Wichita by Government troops and scouts. About noon of that day a detachment of the Sixth United States Cavalry, of 100 men, under the command of Captain Whee, and scouts Lee Stewart and Jack Bridges, rode in from the north and surrounded the Harris House (now the rear end of the Tremont), of which John Ledford was proprietor. The officers and scouts dismounted, and they, together with a detachment of a Sergeant and six men, began to search the premises. The house was at that time situated on North Main street, at the corner of Third. They inquired for Ledford. His wife, then a young bride, informed them that he was not at home. They searched the house thoroughly, however, but without avail. Finally their attention was attracted to an out-house in the rear of George DeMoose's saloon, nearly opposite, by the frequent visitations of a man from the saloon to the out-house. They immediately surrounded this suspected place, and demanded Ledford'ss urrender. Lieut. Hargis stood in front of the door, Lee Stewart was stationed in the rear of the house, and Jack Bridges at one side. The answer to the lieutenant's summons was a shot from a pistol in the hands of Ledford, who suddenly sprang through the door, and defiantly faced his pursuers. The firing became general. Ledford's pistols, which he had obtained at the saloon, were old and rusty; with his own pistols, he would have, doubtless, killed a half dozen of his enemies, and escaped in the bargain. He handled a pistol expertly; his aim was deadly, and he could fire with either hand, or both simultaneously, with precision. Lee Stewart fired under cover and disabled Ledford's wrist, and as Ledford turned to shoot at Stewart, Ledford was shot in the back by Bridges. Ledford then shot Bridges through one of his arms, the latter wheeling just in time to save the bullet from his breast. Bridges fell, and Ledford jumped upon him, and placing a pistol to his breast, snapped a cap, the charge refusing to leave. Then realizing the worthlessness of his weapons, he cast them away, and while making a retreat he was shot in the back by Bridges, the ball breaking the spine; still he stood erect. A Texas man threw him another revolver, with which he fired two more shots, but they were ineffectual. He then walked to Dagner's cigar store, across the street, and sat down on a barrel, from which he soon fell. He was carried to his house, where he expired within an hour. Bridges was conveyed to camp by the troops. Ledford was charged with complicity in the robbery of a Government train, and the murder of some of its teamsters, and the troops only designed to make his arrest. Bridges soon recovered from his wound.

September 22, 1872, Jackson Davis was shot and killed by Charles Jennison, in a shooting affray. Davis shot Jennison first, the ball passing through the left side of Jennison's neck. Jennison shot Davis through the body, causing death within five minutes. Simultaneously with Jennison's shot, was another shot from Davis' pistol, which hit Jennison in the right arm, below the elbow.

June 2, 1873, a soldier of the Sixth United States Cavalry was shot and killed in John Beard's ("Red's") dance house in West Wichita, by a party of roughs. The soldier had previously shot one of "Red's" girls. A general fight ensued, in which one soldier was killed and two wounded.

In June, 1873, a colored man named Reed was shot and killed by a Texan named Ramsey. Two days afterward, Ramsey was killed on the Ninnescah, by "Billy Bowlegs."

In 1873, S. C. Johnson, who had been Treasurer of Sedgwick County for the previous four years, mysteriously disappeared, and has never been heard of since. His official accounts were correct, and the office of Treasurer had been transferred to his successor, Col. L. N. Woodcock. When last seen he was known to have $1,000 on his person. There was due him from the county for salary, $500, which is still payable to himself or heirs.

August 16, 1873, a Texas cattle herder named Reddis, was shot and killed by a Mexican, at Oges Camp, on the Ninnescah. The Mexican fled, and a couple of days afterward, he in company with another Mexican was halted on Slate Creek, below Wellington, in Summer County, by Ike Walker, a noted frontiersman and desperado, who had been informed of the killing of Reddis. Walker killed both of the Mexicans.

August 20, 1873, William McKee was killed by what was alleged to be an accidental shot from a pistol he was repairing, in a blacksmith shop, in West Wichita. William Anderson, who owned the pistol and who was present at the time of the killing, was arrested on the charge of murder, but was acquitted. About two weeks afterward, Anderson had both of his eyes shot out in a shooting affray at "Rowdy Joe's."

August 23, 1873, John Snider, a blacksmith, age twenty-seven, was thrown from a buggy and killed, while enjoying a ride with a friend in Wichita.

October 27, 1873, John Beard, alias "Red," was shot by Joseph Lowe, alias, "Rowdy Joe," from the effects of which Beard died in a few days. The shooting occurred in Joe's dance house, in West Wichita. "Red" owned a dance house next door to "Rowdy's," and on the night referred to, "Red" and a party of friends were indulging in a drunken frolic at his place. Finally, they visited "Joe's" where a dance was in progress, and "Red's" first salutation to his neighbor "Joe" was a shot into the crowd from his pistol, wounding one of the girls. The firing soon became general, and several were wounded, among others, William Anderson, whose eyes were shot out. "Red" received a shot through the body from "Joe's" pistol, and in a few days he died from the effects of the wound. Beard was a son of the founder of Beardstown, Illinois; had been respectably raised, and well educated and left a comfortable fortune. His sobriquet, "Red" was derived from his red head and beard.

January 1, 1874, Frank Seivers was murdered and his body burned in the paint shop of McNutt & Winner, in Wichita. Seivers, who was a painter, had been induced to come from Kansas City, Mo., to work for McNutt & Winner. He arrived in Wichita late in the night of December 31st, and was taken at once to the paint shop, where lodging had been arranged for him. During the night he was murdered and the shop burned. The next morning, the remains of Seivers were found, which were first supposed to be those of McNutt, it having been known that he lodged in the shop, and he also having disappeared. Soon suspecting that there was foul play somewhere in this business, the authorities caused the arrest of Winner and presently it came to light that there was an insurance policy on McNutt's life for $5,000. About a month afterward, McNutt was discovered and captured in Platte County, Mo. Both were tried for murder in the first degree, at the next term of the District Court, convicted and sentenced to be hanged. They are now in the penitentiary.

January 1, 1876, an omnibus driver, known by the name of "Leg," was shot and killed by Michael Meagher, City Marshal. "Leg" had been taking part in a "Ragtag" procession, had been drinking freely, and was turbulent and boisterous. While in the march he assaulted and broke one of the arms of Mr. Dennison, as "Four-Eyes." Afterward he attacked the City Marshal, known who was compelled to shoot "Leg" in self-defense.

WICHITA.

Wichita was named after the band of Indians called Wichitas. They came into the Arkansas Valley in 1864 and settled along the Little Arkansas River, between the Junction and the old fair grounds. The country at that time was owned by the Osages. Some of the teepees of the Wichitas were still standing on the land now owned by William Greiffenstein, north of the city, as late as 1871. A chartered company was formed at Topeka, in the summer of 1868; comprised of Governor S. J. Crawford, W. W. H. Lawrence, J. R. Mead, E. P. Bancroft, A. F. Horner and I. S. Munger. Mr. Munger removed from Topeka to Wichita during the year 1868, when the survey and plat of the original town were made by Mr. Finn. William Greiffenstein soon afterwards bought A. A. Moore's claim, now comprising Greiffenstein's additions, when the upper and lower town fight began. At that time, the business and prospects were away north of the present business center. Henry Vigus ran the "Buck-horn tavern," where every class of frontiersmen, as well as border terror, had a home. A music-box was one of the features of the hotel, which was in itself enlivening, often engaging the motley assemblies into a dirt floor dance, until, on one occasion, it provoked the ire of John Ledford, while the Buck-horners were engaged at the evening repast, when he jerked a navy from his belt and silenced it forever. "Durfee's ranch" was the headquarters; Milo B. Kellogg was Postmaster, clerk and book-keeper, assisted by Charles Hunter; Henry Vigus was doing the saddlery job work and Charles Garrison was mail rider. John Gifford, who kept a saloon and refreshment stand in the log house now used as a stable by N. C. Woodman, was the first man who died a natural death among the whites. A great many of the Wichita Indians died here during the cholera epidemic of 1866-67. At that early date there was no lack of amusements, as the soldiers stationed there had formed a negro minstrel troupe, which furnished amusement to the squatters. In 1870, D. S. Munger opened a hotel; Mr. Munger was also Postmaster, carrying the mail in his hat and delivering it to parties in person. Doc. Lewellen kept the first grocery store, in the log house just north of Woodman's, after Durfee's retirement. Lewellen's Hall was at the extreme north end of Maine street, and was once a grocery owned by Lewellen. It is now an adjunct to an elevator. It was in this hall that Uncle Jack Peyton delivered his celebrated lecture on "Theology and Theocracy." Uncle Jack was a character, as well as a saddler. Nature or an accident had shortened one of his legs, making one about two feet shorter than the other. When standing on his long leg he was about six feet high, and he had a ludicrous habit, when talking, of frequently alternating his height. He had a stentorious voice and dealt liberally in expletives. The subject of the lecture had been publicly announced by hand bills, printed at the office of the Vidette, which boasted at that time of only one font of wood type. The hall was brilliantly illuminated with six tallow candles, held in their own grease. The stand consisted of a dry goods box and the seats were rough boards resting on nail kegs. The colloquial powers of the lecturer, which were usually quite vigorous and obedient to command, had been stimulated to a greater degree of activity on this occasion, by liberal imbibitions into his stomach of invigorating fluids. Quite a crowd of ladies and gentlemen were present to greet the disseminator of theological knowledge. Standing on his elongated pedestal, as he commenced, he said, in a guttural tone, "Ladies and gentlemen, theology is religion, as taught by the ministerial profession. Theocracy is the—is the—well, by blank anyhow" (assuming his shorter pedestal) "one defines the moral law; the other—blank is to blank." At this point up jumped James Vigus, who shouted, "Jack Peyton don't know what he is talking about. I want to tell you why people get drunk." Here Uncle Jack exclaimed, "Sit down! Who paid for these candles? Who rented this hall?" In this strain the lecture proceeded for nearly an hour, until nothing but shrieks of laughter and the occasional popping off of a revolver through one of the open windows could be heard.

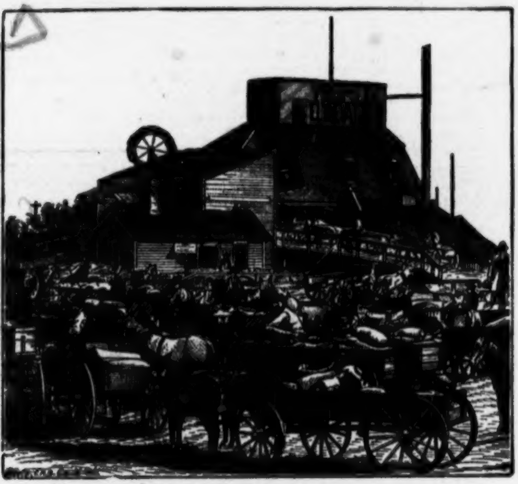
William Matthewson was freighting through Wichita as early as 1860. His wife, who crossed the Arkansas River at Wichita in 1865, is believed to have been the first woman who ever crossed this stream. The first sermon was preached at "Durfee's ranch," in 1868, by Rev. Mr. Saxley, a Baptist; the hymn sung on that occasion was "Old John Brown," which was all the audience knew. Mrs. Vigus was the first white woman that made Wichita her home. She died in 1871, respected and mourned by all who knew her. Mrs. D. S. Munger, the hostess of the Munger House, is still living and held in kind remembrance for her many endearing qualities. Mrs. Waterman, Mrs. Everets, Mrs. Sagles, Mrs. Hunter, Mrs. Hall, Mrs. H. Allen, Mrs. Abraham Smith and Mrs. Meagher were all pioneer ladies and are still living in and about Wichita. Sedgwick Hoover was the first child born in the county, December 25, 1869, being the date of his birth. He was named after his native county. The first child born in the village of Wichita was Frank H., son of Joseph Allen; the date of whose birth was July 3, 1870. He survived only two months. Maud Teeter was born a few months prior but not in Wichita. The first marriage was that of Perry Eaton, in the winter of 1869. Reuben Riggs opened the first law office during the winter of 1869-70, and H. C. Sluss in the spring of 1870. Steele, Bright & Roe opened the first real estate office; next was H. E. Van Trees & S. H. Smith, then Stephens, Rouse & Reeves. J. M. Steele is still in the business. Bunnel & Roys, Healey & Neiderlander, Hobbs & Wilhite, Elliott & Mahin, Hatfield & Co., and F. A. Sowers, about in the order named, are the real estate men at present engaged in the calling at Wichita. Joseph Allen opened the first drug store, followed by Aldrich & Simmons. Jack Ledford purchased Mr. Hubbard's interest with Mr. Matsil in the general merchandise business, getting in addition the grand hotel, then being the front (now the rear) part of the Fremont. Ledford named the hotel "Harris House" in honor of the maiden name of his wife. The hotel was not run by him over a month before he was killed in a street fight, almost in front of his hotel, February 28, 1871, by a company of United States soldiers and a band of Government scouts, who sought to arrest him for his complicity in a previous transaction, wherein a Government train of fifty wagons had been plundered, the stock driven off and several of the drivers murdered. Edward W. Smith had a grocery and general outfitting store in the frame building on Main street, now owned by W. C. Woodman, and next door south of his bank. J. H. Black and Lee Nixon were his clerks. J. M. Johnson opened the first exclusive grocery store in the same building that Jacob Wingardt is now using for a carpenter shop on North Main street. Mr. Bailey opened the first hardware store in a little frame building that stood about where J. A. Black's "Diamond Front Grocery" now stands. Michael Zimmerly started a hardware store and tin shop nearly opposite, and Schattner & Shorb kept a saloon in a frame building that stood upon the lot now owned by Deacon Smith, one door north of the present postoffice. H. H. Allen ran the first boarding house on the corner opposite Smith's carpenter shop, on Upper Main street. John Martin ran a restaurant north of Steele's real estate office, and just opposite was the Bismarck saloon. Doc. Oatley had a story and a half residence where the Occidental now stands, and just north, in the building still standing, E. H. Nugent started the first bakery and sunk the first drive well ever operated in Wichita. Where the Lynch building now stands, Hills & Kramer opened the first regular dry goods store, although Mr. Hughes kept a small stock of dry goods and clothing previously, in the building north of W. Mason's dwelling, on Main street. The Vidette building stood a few rods farther north. The Vidette was the first newspaper printed in the Arkansas Valley, for its entire length. Charles Hill opened a drug store in a small frame building near Kimmerlie & Adams's tombstone shops, afterwards building a few doors farther south. In the meantime Solomon Kohn came down from Hays City and rented the frame store room now south of Lynch's, on Main street, where he opened out in dry goods, groceries, clothing, boots and shoes, etc. He soon built lower down, next door to Charles Hill's. The first church edifice was an adobe, with a dirt roof, that stood half a block north of Third street, on the east side of Main street. It was built by the Episcopalians, under the guidance of the then pastor, Rev. J. P, Hilton. It was a unique structure. A rude cross was nailed up in front of the entrance, the light was admitted through two small square apertures cut high up in the mud and secured by wooden shutters; the roof waved in summer with highly colored prairie flowers and a luxuriant growth of tall grass, and rattled in winter time with the wind whistling through the naked sunflower stalks, that grew up there, also. The vestrymen were William B. Hutchinson, of the Vidette, Charles Schattner, of the Bon Ton Saloon, George Richards, a tramp printer, "Doctor" William Dow, a professional gambler, and John Edward Martin, whose chief anxiety in life was to find some place where he could not be found by the citizens of the place he last emigrated from. It was during the administration of this vestry, when J. R. Mead, who had donated the church its ground, proposed to swap for another site, farther away, and some of the officers thought, in an inferior location. At a meeting of the vestry called to consider this proposition, the discussion grew warm, but the matter was finally setttled by a powerful speech from Mr. Hutchinson, which was as follows: "Fellow Christians, I don't care a blank what the other officers of this church do on this question, but as for me, I say, most emphatically, that I will never consent to see J. R. Mead or any other one of you, cheat Jesus Christ out of a foot of ground."* The proposition was unanimously declined. In July, 1870, as recorded in its municipal history, Wichita was incorporated as a village. W. C. Woodman & Sons opened the first moneyed institution in 1870, since merged into the Arkansas Valley Bank. The Wichita bank was opened in 1871, as a National Bank, but it closed in 1875.

In 1872; Wichita was made a city of the second class, and out of a vote of 479, E. B. Allen was elected Mayor; Michael Meagher, Marshal; William Baldwin, City Attorney; Charles A. Phillips, Treasurer; J. M. Atwood, Police Judge. During this year, the structure now spanning the Arkansas River, at the west end of Douglas avenue, was erected, at a cost of $27,000. The bridge was built by W. J. Hobson, contractor, and paid for by a joint stock company, organized for the purpose. It nearly paid for itself in tolls the first year, and would have made the company rich, had it not been for the pluck of A. A. Moore, Hills & Kramer, J. C. Fraker and others, "northenders," who forced it to be sold, by starting a free bridge near the junction of the two rivers, where the park now is. The county then bought it, and abolished tolls.

In 1872, Wichita became the principal headquarters in Kansas of the Texas cattle business. It was here where the great herds from Texas centered, and where they obtained their first shipments by rail. Two million dollars exchanged hands in the cattle traffic at Wichita that year. There were driven into Sedgwick County, that year, three hundred and fifty thousand head of Texas cattle, and thirty-five hundred car loads were shipped from there by rail, during the same period. At this time, Wichita was the liveliest and most uproarious town between the two seas. James G. Hope was Mayor. Large sign boards were posted up at the four conspicuous entrances into town, bearing the strange device, "Everything goes in Wichita. Leave your revolvers at police headquarters, and get a check. Carrying concealed weapons strictly forbidden."

Everything did "go" in Wichita. There was not a gambling device known to the world that was not in full operation, openly. A variety theater nightly gave exhibitions in the old building now used as a carpenter shop, south of the residence of Thomas Lynch, on North Main street. It was, in fact, more of a "free and easy" than a theater, and could be more properly called a scarcity than a variety, as the distinguishing feature of the stage was a scarcity of wearing apparel on the part of the female performers.

The streets clanged with the noisy spurs of Texas cow boys and Mexican ranchmen, while the crowds that marched along the resounding sidewalks, were as motley as could be seen at any one spot in America. Texan sombreros and leather leggins; brigandish-looking velvet jackets, with bright buttons, close together, of the Mexicans, buckskin garments of the frontiersmen, and the highly-colored blanket; representatives from a half dozen different tribes of Indians, were familiar sights on the streets. A brass band played from morning until far into the night, on a two story platform raised over the sidewalk, against the large frame building, still standing, opposite the New York store. This music was to attract customers to gambling dens. In the rear of the real estate office of Steele & Smith was pitched a large tent, in which was given the wonderful exhibitions of Prof. S. Gessley, the armless wonder. His performances were described as follows in his programme for that distribution:



WHEAT MARKET, WICHITA.

"The famous Gessley minus arms,
Sporting in his coach and four,
Sat in calm repose
With the reins between his toes.
He loads, primes, put on a cap,
And fires off a gun,
And often goes to shoot wild game,
For want of better fun.
He handles the pen with the ease
Of any in the land;
In fact, his foot is turned into a hand."

Connected therewith, under the pavilion, was also the child wonder, born alive (but then dead), with two heads, four arms, two feet, and a perfect body; also a pig with two bodies, eight legs, etc. To attract the crowd a hand organ, filled with doleful and disjointed tunes, ground unceasingly, while at ten-minute interludes, all day long, would ring out the sharp report of the gun the professor fired with his toes, followed by the deep Pennsylvania Dutch accent of the professor, yelling in his hilarity until it could be heard above the organ and band over the way, "Dere she goes again; kick like a mool." Mix all this with the motley caravan that thronged the streets; the fighting, yelling, swearing, and the frequent ring of the revolver, sometimes carrying death with it; the night scenes at the dance houses, with the painted courtesans, drunken brawls, and occasional shooting carnivals of death—and you have something of an idea of the appearance of Wichita in 1872-'73. S. S. Prouty, in a letter to his paper the Topeka Daily Commonwealth, from Wichita, written in October, 1872, says: "The population of Wichita is decidedly heterogeneous. Here may be seen people of every class, shade and character. The sleek and well dressed speculator, with airs suggestive of genteel living and plethoric purses; the independent, money-making, somewhat don't-care-a-cuss-ativeness cattle-drover; the rollicking, reckless, free and-easy and money-spending herder; the substantial citizen; the professional gambler, and the long-haired desperado of the plains, are here brought together of necessity. A description of Wichita would be incomplete without a notice of the notorious dance house on the west side of the river, kept by that singular personage, 'Rowdy Joe,' or Joseph Lowe, his real name. Joe has been a frontiersman for many years, and has experienced about as much roughness as any other man. His dance house is patronised mainly by cattle herders, though all classes visit it, the respectable mostly from curiosity. I understand that the receipts at his bar have averaged over $100 per night for months. The receipts are from drinks. No charge is made for dancing, but it is expected that the males will purchase drinks for themselves and female partners at the conclusion of each dance. Joe is his own policeman, and maintains the best of order. No one is disposed to pick a quarrel with him, or infringe upon the rules of his house. A dancing party at this place is unique, as well as interesting. The Texan, with mammoth spurs on his boots, which are all exposed, and a broad-brimmed sombrero on his head, is seen dancing by the side of a well dressed, gentlemanly appearing stranger from some eastern city, both having painted and jeweled courtesans for partners. In the corners of the hall are seen gamblers, playing at their favorite game of poker. Jests and conversation suitable to the place and occasion are heard."

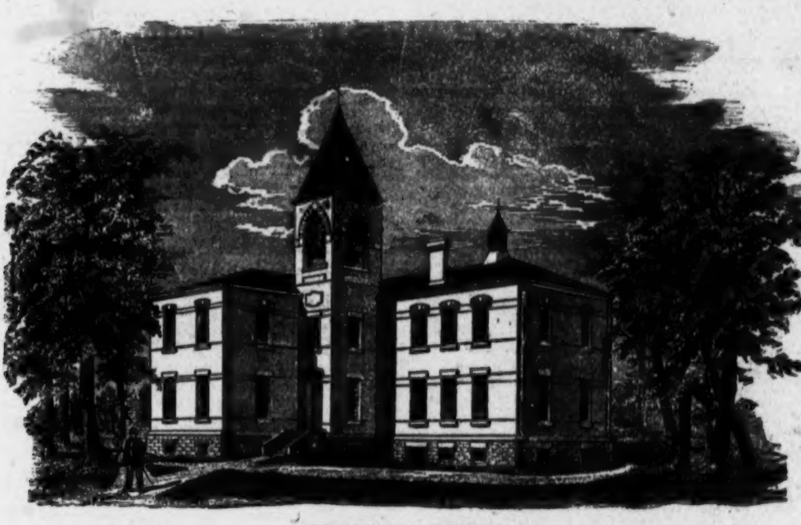
MUNICIPAL HISTORY.

The history of Wichita as a municipality dates from July, 1870, when it was incorporated as a village. The first Town Board comprised C. A. Stafford, Pres.; E. W. Smith, Treas.; Jno. Peyton, Morgan Cox and C. T. Pierce. C. H. Smith was appointed Clerk; I. Walker, Marshal, and H. E. Vantrees officiated as Police Judge.

In November of the same year, the original town site was enlarged by the filing of the plat of Hilton's addition, and in December, English's addition was entered.



PUBLIC SCHOOL, WICHITA.

April 3, 1871, Wichita entered upon its existence as a city of the third class, and polled 156 votes at the first election, which resulted in the election of the following officers: Mayor, E. B. Allen; Councilmen, W. B. Hutchinson, S. C. Johnson, C. Schattner, George Schlichter, A. H. Fabrique, George Vantilliburgh. Other officers, D. C. Hackett, Attorney; H. E. Vantrees, Police Judge; O. W. Brownwell, Clerk; N. A. English, Treas.; M. Meagher, Marshal. By the spring of 1872, the population had increased so rapidly that an organization of the second class was effected, and the following officers elected: Mayor, E. B. Allen; Councilmen, J. A. Stevenson, A. Schattner, H. Owens, H. H. Lindsay, J. M. Martin, A. J. Longsdorf, J. C. Fraker, William Smith; Attorney, W. Baldwin; Police Judge, J. M. Atwood; Treasurer, C. A. Phillips; Engineer, M. The following named gentlemen have officiated as Mayor from 1871 to 1882, inclusive: 1871-72, E. B. Allen; 1873-74, James G. Hope; 1875, George E. Harris; 1876-77, James G. Hope; 1878, William Grieffenstein; 1879, *Sol. H. Kohn; 1880-82, W. Grieffenstein. Present (1882) officers are Mayor, William Grieffenstein; Councilmen, N. A. English, F. G. Smith, C. E. McAdams, J. P. Allen, M. Zimmerly, P. Getto, J. M. Allen, J. L. Dyer; Police Judge, A. A. Glenn; Justices of the Peace, J. Junkermann, W. W. Thomas; Attorney, W. P. Walker; Treasurer, C. Kimmerle; Clerk, F. Schattner; Constables, J. P. Thomas, E. Grady; Marshal, James Cairns; Engineer, A. Bailey.

An attempt was made in 1871, to organize a hook and ladder company, which partially succeeded, but after a year's duration the company was disbanded. Under an ordinance passed by the City Council in 1872, a company was organized with forty men, under the following officers: C. A. Phillips, Foreman; R. Cogdell, First Asst.; C. H. Horner, Second Asst., and E. B. Jewett, Sec'y. The city purchased two fire extinguishers and hook and ladders at an expense of $1,500. In 1874, C. Phillips was appointed Chief Engineer, and the department was classified into three companies known as "Frontier Fire Company," Nos. 1 and 2, and "Frontier Hook and Ladder Company." The foremen of the companies in the order mentioned were, C. H. Hunter, R. Cogdell, and C. K. Viney. In 1875, the organization disbanded, and for two years the city was without a fire department. In 1877, "Frontier Hook and Ladder Company, No. 1," was organized with about thirty-five men, with the following officers: C. H. Hunter, Foreman; D. Cogdell, Asst. Foreman; Cecil R. Viney, Orderly; C. Jones, Sec'y. In 1878, two Champion Chemical Fire Engines were purchased by the city at a cost of $2,500. April 30, 1879, the company was incorporated under the laws of the State, by J. W. Wingard, J. H. Black, D. X. Williams, W. S. Corbett, William Dibbs, M. B. Kellogg, C. R. Viney, R. W. Aldrich. Officers: J. W. Wingard, Foreman; D. X. Williams, First Asst.; M. B. Kellogg, Orderly; C. E. Rogers, Second Asst.; G. W. Fryer, Sec'y.; C. H. Allen, Treas. Present officers: J. W. Wingard, Foreman; C. E. Rogers, First Asst.; D. X. Williams, Second Asst.; C. R. Viney, Orderly; W. Atkinson, Sec'y; C. H. Allen, Treas. Present number of members, twenty-five.

Wichita Water Works.—November 22, 1882, a stock company was incorporated with a capital of $100,000, the corporators being S. Houck, F. Williams, H. W. Lewis, J. Jones and R. Coggrell. Its officers are S. Houck, President; H. W. Lewis, Treasurer; F. Williams, Secretary, and J. Jones, Superintendent. In the construction of the work, the main principles of the Holley System will be carried out, with the addition of a twenty-five foot "stand-pipe." The works, which are located in the northwest part of the city on the Little Arkansas river, will be completed in March, 1883, at an expense of about $90,000. Sixty hydrants have been purchased by the city, for which eight miles of main will be used. With the efficient Fire Department, and this system of Water Works, insurance policies will not command a premium.

Post Office.—July 3, 1868, a military post office was established where Wichita now stands, Capt. S. L. Barr, Fifth United States Infantry, officiating as Postmaster. Soon after, the civil post office was established, and Milo B. Kellogg appointed Postmaster. After him, in the order mentioned, followed D. S. Munger, John Dickey, J. T. Holmes, R. L. West and M. M. Murdock, the present incumbent. In January, 1870, the first mail route was established from El Dorado to Wichita; C. M. Garrison, carrier. From a small fourth class office, the office is now one of the three largest in the State.

The number of letters mailed per day, on an average, is 1,550, or 585,500 for the past year, as per report. The number of letters delivered exceeds the number sent out by nearly one hundred thousand, or over two thousand daily. The revenues per annum are, per last report:

Box rents	$ [illegible]
Stamped matter sold	[illegible]
Fees on money orders	[illegible]
Total government receipts	[illegible]
Amount of money orders paid during past year	[illegible]
Amount of money orders issued	$131,340.00

United States Land Office.—This important factor in promoting the settlement of a new county was moved from Augusta, Butler Co., Kan., to Wichita in March, 1872. The office was then in charge of W. A. Shannon, Receiver, and Mr. Aikin, Register. In the summer of the same year, W. S. Jimkins, was appointed Register, and J. C. Redfield, Receiver. In May, 1874, Mr. Jimkins was succeeded by H. L. Taylor, and in January, 1877, Redfield was succeeded by Jas. L. Dyer, the present Receiver. In March, 1879, R. L. Walker, the present Register, succeeded H. L. Taylor. The district embraces the counties of Butler, Cowley, Harvey, Reno, Sedgwick, Sumner, Harper, Kingman, and portions of Greenwood, Elk, Chautauqua, Chase, Marion, McPherson and Barbour. In these counties above mentioned there are 1,000,000 acres, not yet entered, divided into the Osage Indian Trust, Cherokee Strip, and Public lands. Since January 1, 1882, about 1,300 entries, embracing 200,000 acres, have been made.

SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.

From Dr. D. R. B. Greenlee, we are informed that the first school taught, not only in Wichita, but in Sedgwick County, was a subscription school held by Wm. Finn, now of Sedgwick City, in the winter of 1869-70. The school was held in an old army "dug-out" located north of the present site of W. C. Woodman's residence, on the Little Arkansas River. Among the first scholars were Mrs. Ida Elder, Mrs. Martsel, formerly Mrs. Langford, W. Vigus, Mrs. V. Wateman, nee Fanny Hale, the children of Dr. Llewellyn and C. Teter. (From our informant we also learn that Mr. Finn organized the first Sabbath school and assessed the pupils $1 apiece for the purpose of purchasing a library.) The next term of school was held by Miss Nora Yale, now Mrs. John Williams, in a log building erected by John and Charles Gifford, and now used as a granary by W. C. Woodman. The first informal school meeting was held in the fall of 1869, and presided over by A. J. Greenway, president, and Dr. Greenlee, secretary.

In 1871, $5,000 in bonds were voted and the first school building erected by the district. The building was a two-story frame structure, located in what is now known as the First ward. This building was used until November, 1873, when it was destroyed by fire. As the population increased, two new frame buildings were erected in the First and Second wards. In 1879, the first brick building was erected in the First ward, at a cost of $[illegible]. In 1880, two more brick structures for school purposes were erected in the Second and Fourth wards, at a cost of $18,000, containing four and six rooms, respectively. At the present time three brick and two frame buildings are in use, affording facilities for seventeen teachers and 1,143 pupils. Buildings and grounds are valued at $60,000. $[illegible] was paid to teachers for the year ending July 3, 1882, and the total school expenses to the same date amounted to $10,901.76.

The Board of Education, as elected May 13, 1873, was composed of the following named gentlemen: R. L. West, A. H. Fabrique, C. M. Garrison, H. J. Hills, M. R. Moser, W. A. Thomas, W. C. Woodman and M. McClean. The present board is composed of M. W. Levy, C. A. VanNess, H. S. Butler, R. Harris, A. B. Wright, J. E. Caldwell, J. A. Longsdorf, John

The Academy, when completed will rank high among the educational institutions of Southern Kansas, and will be but another evidence of the pride that Wichita takes in her educational advantages.

The pioneer church organization of Wichita, is the First Presbyterian Church, organized March 13, 1870, with twelve members—Rev. W. R. Boggs, pastor. During the fall of the same year a frame structure was built and used for devotional exercises until 1873, when it was sold to the Catholic denomination. Services were held at various places until July 4, 1876, when the corner stone of the present edifice was laid with appropriate ceremonies. The edifice, including grounds, was completed at a cost of $5,000. December 1, 1871, Mr. Boggs was succeeded by Rev. J. P. Hasson, who remained until the spring of 1879, when he was succeeded after a duration of a few months, by Rev. J. D. Hewitt, the present pastor. Present number of communicants about 200.

St. Johns' Church (Episcopal).—Services of this denomination were held in the city early as 1870, by Bishop Vail. Other services were held until 1877, when a vestry was organized and Rev. Colton, engaged as pastor. The present church edifice was completed in the spring of 1878. In the spring of 1880, Rev. Deleu, D. D., took charge of the organization and officiated until 1882, when he was succeeded by Rev. Chamberlain, the present pastor.

The First Baptist Church was organized May 26, 1872, with twenty-six members. Rev. J. C. Post, the first regular pastor, officiated from January, 1873, to January, 1875. During the next year the church was without a regular pastor, when Rev. W. F. File occupied the pulpit eight months. In June, 1877, Rev. J. P. Davis took charge and remained until the summer of 1878. He was succeeded by the Rev. J. D. Leggett who remained until the summer of 1882. Present pastor, Rev. W. F. Harper. The church edifice which is a brick structure, was dedicated February, 1874. Present membership sixty.

The Catholic Church was organized November, 1872, by Father Anton Kuhle of Wyandotte. The Christian Church was organized in 1875, by Rev. J. H. Hughes. He was succeeded in the spring of 1876, by Elder W. M. Trugley, who remained until the summer of 1878. The organization then "lost its identity for a time." In the spring of 1879, the Ladies Christian Aid Society was organized and formed a nucleus, which culminated into the present church organization in February, 1881. Elder Joseph E. Cain was engaged as pastor April 1, 1881, and is the present incumbent (1882). Services are held in Eagle Hall. Present membership forty-five.

THE PRESS.

In the summer of 1870, F. A. Sowers purchased of Joseph Clark, of Leavenworth, a printing office, then stored at Fort Harker, from which place he had it hauled to Wichita. On the 18th of August, 1870, the first number of the Wichita Vidette appeared, F. A. Sowers, editor and proprietor. Afterwards W. B. Hutchinson became associated with Mr. Sowers, and the two continued the publication of the paper until the summer of 1871, when Mr. Sowers withdrew. Mr. Hutchinson published the paper alone late in the summer of 1872, when it passed into the hands of Rev. Mr. Perkins, who changed its politics from Republican to liberal Republican, supporting Horace Greeley for President. The paper died with the demise of liberalism, and the office was removed to Oxford, Sumner County. The Vidette was the first paper published in the Arkansas Valley during its entire length in Kansas. Mr. Hutchinson is now publishing the Commercial at Caldwell, and Mr. Sowers is engaged in the real estate business at Wichita.

The Gazette, independent in politics, was published through a portion of the year 1871, by Yale Brothers. The material was then moved to Sedgwick City (then in Sedgwick County), where the Sedgwick City Gazette was published a short time.

April 22, 1872, was the date of the first issue of the Wichita City Eagle, M. M. Murdock, editor and proprietor. On the 17th of July, 1873, R. P. Murdock became a partner, and the two have published the paper ever since. The printing office is one of the best in the State, having power printing presses, run by steam, and a book bindery in connection. The paper is one of the best conducted, and most influential weeklies in the State. M. M. Murdock has served three terms in the State Senate, and has been Postmaster at Wichita for several years.

On the 20th of October, 1872, appeared the first number of the Wichita Daily Beacon, F. G. Millison, publisher, and F. A. Sowers, editor. On the 11th of December following, the daily having been suspended, the same parties commenced the publication of the weekly Beacon, and published it about a year, again publishing the daily through the bulk of the cattle drive in 1873. Millison then took the job department and Sowers the paper. In February, 1874, Milton Gable purchased Mr. Sowers' interest and conducted the paper until July 1, 1875, when he sold to Frank Smith and Frank Fisher. In March, 1876, Fisher retired and W. S. White having purchased an interest, succeeded him. Messrs. Smith & White have continued its publication ever since. In December, 1877, Mr. Millison sold his job office to C. M. Kellar, who, the next spring, moved it into a room in Herrington's building, over his book store. Smith & White immediately put in an entire new job office, following with a power paper press, and steam engine, January 13, 1879. The politics of the paper is Democratic. It is one of the ablest and most respected political journals in the State.

In the spring of 1877, R. A. Neff started the Independent, which lived about six months, when the material passed into the hands of J. W. Robbins, who, in October, 1877, started the Herald. Shortly afterward T. L. Nixon became associated with Mr. Robbins. Mr. Nixon was succeeded by R. C. Dean, and Mr. Dean by C. W. Green, who, in a short time retired and started the Anthony Journal. Mr. Green now publishes a leading paper at Santa Fe, N. M. In June, 1879, Mr. Robbins sold to George Martin, who published the paper until October of that year, when it was discontinued. Mr. Robbins is now Surveyor-General of the Territory of Arizona. The material of the Herald was purchased by Kirkpatrick & Kirk, who, on the 20th of December, 1879, issued the first number of the weekly Republican. On the 8th of January, 1880, the first number of the Daily Republican was issued, R. C. Dean having again become a partner. He retired the following March, and the 20th of September, Mr. Kirk sold to his partner. Calvin Bidlach bought a half interest October 1, 1880, and F. A. Sowers bought Kirkpatrick's remaining interest, December 12, 1880, and on the 19th of March, 1881, he sold to A. Whitworth, during whose administration the daily was twice enlarged, the last time to twenty-eight columns. About the first of June, Whitworth sold to T. J. Shelton, and during the same month, the name of the paper was changed to Daily Times. About the last of July, Mr. Bidlach sold his interest to Mr. Shelton. In February, 1882, Judge W. P. Campbell purchased the paper and published it several months, when he sold it back to Mr. Shelton. The paper is now owned and published by I. N. Stoutemeyer.

The Market Reporter was a sprightly little daily, published by C. M. Kellar, during the wheat season of 1878, its chief feature being the telegraphic market reports. It lived only that season.

On the 1st of January, 1881, appeared the first number of the weekly Tribune, published by Hobson & Cox. March 18, 1881, the firm was changed to Hobson & Harris. April 19, 1881, a daily issue appeared. The paper did not live long.

Tremont House.—The first hotel in Wichita, known as the Empire House, was opened in May, 1870, by Wm. Griffenstein, in a two-story frame building located on the corner of Third and Lane streets. During the same year Matzel & Hubbard became its proprietors, and second to it J. Ledford, who called it the "Lewis House." Ledford who was known as a notorious character, was soon afterward killed by a Deputy United States Marshall, while resisting an arrest. After his death the hotel passed into the hands of Rouse & Lamb, who named it the "Harris House." Messrs. Cox & Blood, the next managers, enlarged the building. After passing into litigation and being managed by different parties it was, in 1878, moved to its present location and named the Tremont, which appellation it still bears, being owned by J. G. Farnwell; but was soon afterward purchased by A. M. Denning, the present proprietor.

The building is a three-story brick structure, 80x100 feet, and contains sixty-two guest rooms. Upon the completion of the building it was leased to Rouse & Lamb, who ran it about three years. After passing through different hands it was, in 1880, purchased by Messrs. Platter, Williams & Hewett, who closed it for six months, and re-fitted and furnished it at an expense of $25,000. November 1, 1880, it was opened by A. W. Davis & W. S. Forey, lessees, who operated it until the spring of 1882, when Col. Frank Williams, its present proprietor, took possession. MANUFACTURES.

Wichita, being situated in the midst of one of the best wheat growing sections in the West, naturally leads in the manufacture of flour. Besides its five flouring mills, there are innumerable feed mills and elevators located in different portions of the city, and forming no small feature among its industries.

Wichita City Mills.—These mills were erected in May, 1874, by Messrs. Shellabargers, Imboden & Oliver. The mill, which is substantially built of stone, is 45x120 feet, including the elevator, and three stories high. The building and machinery cost $50,000. Up to 1880 four run of buhrs were used, when the capacity was increased to eight run of buhrs, and six sets of rolls, at a cost of $20,000. In order to propel this machinery, a 120 horse-power Harris-Corliss engine is used. With an elevator with a capacity of 50,000 bushels, and a mill that manufactures 250 barrels of flour per day, the firm of Shellabargers, Imboden & Oliver control a large amount of the trade in Southern Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona.

Hydraulic Mills.—These buildings were erected in 1881, by Messrs. H. W. Lewis and J. and B. Deffenbaugh, who commenced operations in October of the same year. The building is a four and one-half story frame, 40x56 feet, and uses four sets of buhrs, which gives it a capacity of from 80 to 100 barrels every twenty-four hours. The power is obtained from the Little Arkansas River, from which the water is conveyed a distance of five miles. Principal trade in New Mexico and Texas.

Farmers and Merchants' Mill.—This mill was first used by the Derby Bros., as a feed mill, transferring their interest to Messrs. Goodyear & Hall in 1881. The new proprietors fitted it up as a grist mill, with two run of stone, and ran it up to August, 1882, when M. Hurst, its present proprietor, purchased the mill and fixtures. In the winter of 1882 and '83, Mr. Hurst commenced the erection of a new brick mill 34x50 feet, two stories high with basement, and an engine room 26x26½ feet, with a shaft room, 17x25 feet. The new mill, when completed, will cost $15,000; have four run of buhrs, and manufacture from 80 to 100 barrels of flour every twenty-four hours.

Diamond Mills.—In March, 1882, Messrs. Dorsey, Alexander & Co., purchased the old "Grange Elevator," and refitted it for milling purposes. The building is a frame, three stories and basement, 36x40; engine room brick, 20x24, and an addition, two stories, 16x22, erected in December, 1882. In November, 1882, the firm name was changed to Dorsey, Smetzer & Tucker. The mill employs four run of buhrs, with a capacity of eighty barrels per day.

Zephyr Mills.—In the winter of 1882 and '83, the Zephyr Mills Company, J. C. Dean, manager, purchased a three-story frame building, 30x140 feet, including warehouse and engine room, and commenced putting in machinery. The mill, when completed, will be run by steam power; have four run of buhrs, and turn out eighty barrels of flour every twenty-four hours.

Wichita Foundry and Machine Shops.—These shops established in 1877, by R. McFarland, the present proprietor. The first building erected was a small frame, 16x24 feet, located on east side of the Arkansas River bridge. The first "cast" was made October 30, 1877, and was successful in every respect. Horse power was used in propelling the machinery, up to a recent date. In August, 1879, the foundry was moved to its present location and an addition, 24x32 feet built. In 1880, steam power was substituted in place of the former primitive motive power. In the fall of 1881, the building was enlarged to 16x56 feet. From a capital of $75.00, the business has grown until now $6,000 is invested. This foundry was the first established, not only in the county, but in Southern Kansas.

The Globe Iron Works, were established in 1878, by C. F. Price, the present proprietor. During the same year, a two story frame building was erected for the purpose in East Wichita.

Wichita Pork-packing Establishment.—This business was established in 1874, by M. Stewart, who used different buildings at different times. In 1879, the firm name was Stewart & Co., since which time many changes have occurred in the ownership, with the exception of Mr. Stewart, who has always retained an interest in it. In 1881, the present buildings were erected, and consist of the main building, 20x50 feet, with basement; lard-house, 14x26 feet, and the slaughter-house, 14x36 feet. Present capacity, 2,000 hogs per season.

The Wichita Brewery was established June 15, 1872, by A. Weigand, who erected his buildings from time to time, until now the works comprise a frame (main) building, 32x70 feet; three ice houses, 10x60, 16x60, and 20x60 feet, respectively, and a two story brick building, 20x36 feet, erected in 1874. In the fall of 1878, J. G. Murphy purchased an interest, and remains a partner, the firm name being Weigand & Co. The capacity of the different departments of the works is as follows: Ice houses, 1,800 tons; storage, 1,500 barrels; brewery, 3,000 barrels per annum.

The Wichita Soda Factory was opened in 1878, by Peter Getto, the present proprietor, in a frame building, 18x40, on the corner of Second and Water streets. Capacity, first year, twenty-eight dozens daily. In December, 1882, a brick, 25x80 feet, was erected on the corner of Second and Main streets, and occupied for the purpose of manufacturing and bottling all kinds of soda and mineral waters. In 1881 a $33,300 business was transacted.

Wichita has, besides the above manufacturing industries mentioned, three first-class elevators, three cigar manufactories, one planing mill, and several feed mills. The city, yet in her infancy, compared with other places, has a bright prospect in her future of becoming the leading manufacturing city of Southwestern Kansas.

Mr. McCracken removed to Illinois where he resided for many years, and came to Kansas in the fall of 1872 and located the following spring. Of his 270 acres the greater part has been improved, and while devoting considerable attention to agriculture he has made a specialty of fruit raising. His orchard contains 25,000 peach, 3,500 apple, 3,000 cherry, 1,000 pear and about 500 plum trees, while ten acres are devoted to raising choice varieties of berries and other small fruits. Flora, too, has been remembered, there being in addition to other flowers at least forty varieties of the rose, while throughout the entire farm evergreens and other ornamental shrubs are tastefully interspersed so as to blend in one harmonious whole, while at a short distance from his residence he has a fish-pond well stocked with German carp. His residence, which was erected in 1879, at a cost of $4,000, is one of the finest in the county. Although now possessing one of the finest fruit farms in the State, Mr. McCracken had from the first to contend with many difficulties; having naturally a taste for horticulture, he determined from his first location here to establish such a farm as he now has. At great labor and expense he had in 1874 made considerable progress when the grasshoppers destroyed all his trees, thus entailing upon him a loss of $4,000; but nothing daunted, he determined to succeed in his undertaking and replanting the following spring, his industry was rewarded three years later by selling $2,200 worth of fruit in the short space of three months. In 1879 he sold $5,000 worth of fruit. He has never since had a failure of his crop, thus showing what may be attained by industry, perseverance and patience, assisted by the fertile soil and genial climate of Kansas. Mr. McCracken is a member of the Horticultural Society, which meets monthly at his house. He is also a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is a liberal-minded, public-spirited and enterprising citizen. He has contributed towards building five different churches. Perry and Mary Wilkins, parents of the subject of the above sketch, were natives of New York. Came to Kansas in 1870, with their two children, John and Frank H. Wilkins. Located on a claim two miles from the city of Wichita, and immediately commenced improvements and laying the foundation for their future home. Being destitute of means, save energy and determination, Mr. Wilkins, and his two boys, spent the three first summers in freighting and at work on the A. T. & S. F. R. R., which at that time was built as far as Topeka, and was being built West. In the winter seasons of these years were engaged in hunting buffalo. Succeeded in killing about 1,000; the hides averaging about $2.50 each, and the meat three cents per pound fresh, and eleven cents dried. By this means were enabled to open and improve their farm, and with their characteristic energy have secured one of the most valuable and pleasant homes in the township; with a fine house, surrounded by large forest trees, which are of their own planting, which are now from eighteen to twenty inches in diameter, they are now reaping the reward of their industry.

This was the grasshopper year. In December of that year, 1874, he formed one of a party of three upon a buffalo hunt, in which they were very successful, but while on their way home they were overtaken by a very severe snow storm, accompanied by cold so intense that they passed upon the prairie the body of a negro whom they had seen but a few hours before in life and vigor but now a stiffened corpse. In 1872 he moved to Montreal and subsequently to Ontario, where he engaged in business as a merchant in the town of Almont, but finding the close confinement of the store injurious to his health he sold out, and in 1879 took a voyage and journey to his native land, returning in the spring of 1880, and in the following year came to Kansas, locating upon his present farm of 160 acres, 105 of which are under cultivation, the principal crop being corn, which has given a good yield. Locating upon his present homestead when there were but two other families in the township, he has lived to see himself surrounded by prosperous farms, his being one of the best in the township, and thus adding another proof to the many already adduced of what the fertile State of Kansas can do to assist those, who, in spite of many discouraging obstacles are willing and able to assist themselves, and know no such word as fail.

In connection therewith he carries a well assorted stock of general merchandise, which is insured for one-third of its value. In 1876 Mr. Dewing was married to Miss Annie Booter, a native of Illinois, but then residing in Sedgwick County. By this marriage there are three children, viz.: Clarence, born May 28, 1877; Jasper, September 15, 1879; and Earl, May 15, 1881. Mr. Dewing is President of Maple Grove Cemetery Association, organized in 1873, and has been Justice of the Peace of the township upon two several occasions.

Sunnydale, was born in Geauga County, Ohio, in 1836, and when a boy removed to Illinois, where his father, Mr. Harry Fosdick, engaged in farming, and where the subject of this sketch, in 1858, was married to Miss Frances Grace, a native of Kilkenney County, Ireland, but who, since the age of six years, has been a resident of this country. Mr. F. enlisted September 18, 1862, in Company A, Tenth Iowa Infantry, and participated in the first siege of Corinth, Iuka and Vicksburg, and was under Grant throughout the whole campaign, and was mustered out May 28, 1865. March 28, 1871, Mr. F. came to Kansas, locating upon the farm where he now resides. He owns 160 acres of land, 70 of which are under cultivation. In addition to agriculture he is raising high-class cattle. His orchard embraces three acres. Of his children only two now survive, viz.: Mrs. Mary Burnley, born October 20, 1862, and now residing in Chase County, and William A., born January 7, 1877. He is one of the representative men of the township. The first sermon in Grant Township was delivered in his house. Like all of the pioneer settlers of Kansas he had his share of hardships, but now has one of the most beautiful farms in Sedgwick County.

GEORGE H. HOLBROOK, farmer, Section 22, P. O. Sunnydale, was born in 1824, in Janesville, Onondaga Co., N. Y., and in 1846 married Miss Catherine Kortright, of Ulster County, N. Y. In 1854 he removed to Henry County, Ill., where he engaged in farming, and in 1873 came to his present farm of eighty acres, all of which is under cultivation. His orchard contains 500 fruit trees, and he has also 5,000 forest trees. There are two children living, viz.: D. W., born December 26, 1847, and George W., July 4, 1849, and who now manages the farm. In February, 1864, Mr. H. enlisted in Company C, Ninth Illinois Cavalry, and remained in active service till mustered out, November 20, 1865. He has been one of the members of the School Board, and is one of the pioneer settlers of the township.

Cady, who has borne him six children, viz.: Mrs. Allerreta Shepard, of Wayne County, Ind.; John F., Emma, Edward, Achsah and George. Mrs. L. died in 1873, and in 1874 Mr. L. married his present wife, Miss Irene L. Stewart, of Ohio. By this marriage there are three children. In August, 1861, Mr. L. enlisted in Company G, Second Indiana Cavalry, and was in all the engagements of his company, and was mustered out in August, 1864, as Corporal. He came to Kansas in 1872, locating in this township. His farm is well watered by windmill power, is well stocked and shaded. He is a member of Kilpatrick Post, No. 26, and one of the early settlers in Grant Township.

THOMAS MASTERSON, farmer, Section 24, P. O. Sunnydale; was born in Canada in 1827. In 1865 he removed to Illinois, where he engaged in farming; and June 1, 1872, located upon his present homestead. Q., who has borne him seven children, viz., Edward John, born September 22, 1850, and who was murdered at Dodge City, April 9, 1878, while in performance of his duty as Marshal, by a drunken cowboy (the death of Marshal Masterson was noted, together with resolutions of respect and condolence, in the local papers of that date); Bartholomew, November 24, 1851, and is now Marshal of Trinidad, Co., where his brothers James and Thomas are located. Mr. M., as will be seen by date of his location here, is one of the pioneer settlers of this region, and to him is due the honor of giving to Sunnydale its appellation. He is one of the representative men of the county, and has held several offices in his township.

At the head of his company Lieut. Weaver was the first man over the stone wall at Winchester, capturing Gen. Jackson's nephew and aide-de-camp George D. Jenkins, and after Chancellorsville was transferred to Second Battalion Veteran Reserve Corps, owing to disability, and at expiration was mustered out as Lieutenant in the United States army. In 1866 he was appointed Postmaster of Williamsburg, remaining three years, and carrying on business as merchant. He was married in 1857 to Miss Clara Benner, who has borne him six children, only two of whom survive—Mrs. Carrie M. Mead and Charles F. Mr. W. came to Kansas in 1877, locating upon his farm of eighty acres, seventy-two of which are under cultivation. In addition to farming he still pursues his trade, and in 1883 built the Park Methodist Episcopal Church, erected at a cost of $2,000. He is also one of the trustees of the church, and donated an acre of land for its erection.

WILLIAM WILLIS, farmer, Section 29, P. O. Valley Centre, was born in Darke County, Ohio, in 1820, and when a young man removed to Logan County, Ill., where he resided for over twenty years, and coming to Kansas in 1876, bought the whole of above Section, which he has since given to his sons George M., Luke A., John C., and Albert P., who have since jointly cultivated it. There are now 540 acres under cultivation in corn, wheat and oats, and there are 200 trees in the orchard. In addition to the above there is a farm of 240 acres in Kichi Township, which is owned by Mr. W. and worked by its future possessor, his youngest son, William T., who is at present unmarried. Of this farm 160 acres are under culture in grain. Mr. Willis has his farms under a high state of cultivation, and upon all are good residences, barns, etc. His son Luke A. was married in the fall of 1878 to Miss Rose Thomson, of this State, and at the same time his brother and partner George M. was married to Miss Annie L. Fisher. Mr. Willis, senior, has a daughter, Mrs. Sarah E. Guthrie, a widow, who resides with and acts as her father's housekeeper. She is also the possessor of a farm of eighty acres in this county. Mr. Luke Willis has been Constable of this township, while his father, Mr. William Willis, has filled the office of Treasurer of Grant Township.

LINCOLN COUNTY.

LINCOLN County, situated just north of the center of the State, is bounded on the north by Mitchel, on the east by Ottawa and Saline, on the south by Ellsworth, and on the west by Osborne and Russell counties. The major portion of the county is rough and undulating, only about fifteen per cent. of the surface being bottom land. The Saline River runs through the center of the county, from west to east; while Salt Creek runs diagonally through the northeast township of the county. The tributaries of the Saline River are Wolf, Spillman, Lost, Beaver, and Twelve Mile creeks on the north; and the Twins, Bull-foot, Spring, Elkhorn, Brush, Owl and Tablerock creeks. The Rattlesnake, Battle, and Prosser creeks run in a northerly direction and empty into Salt Creek.

In the bluff and highland in Range 9 large quantities of coal are being mined for fuel. This coal burns very readily but is not so solid as the Leavenworth or Fort Scott coal. Considerable quantities of zinc are found in the cinders. New banks are being opened in Grant Township, at present writing.

On Salt Creek several salt springs and marshes occur. They are not being utilized at present, except by holders of large herds of cattle who occasionally drive them over this salt lick or range.

Lincoln County is largely open to range and is considered a good grazing county. It has never been a very productive corn county, the average yield this year (1882) being less than eighteen bushels per acre, the total crop of the county being about 600,000 bushels. Winter wheat, however, is more to be relied upon and is consequently the favorite crop of the farmers. In 1882, 33,600 acres were devoted to this crop with an average yield of twenty bushels per acre, making a total yield of 672,180 bushels. This is hauled to Salina, Ellsworth, Minneapolis and Beloit for shipment. Spring wheat has almost entirely gone out of date. Rye and oats are generally a good crop, 127,260 bushels of the former, and 123,640 bushels of the latter being raised in 1882. About 2,000 acres of broom corn were planted and a yield of 1,120,200 pounds was the result.

Lincoln County reports about 11,000 head of cattle and 6,000 head each of swine and sheep. Many more are herded here during the summer but are withdrawn to feed during the winter.

The Indians did not abandon the Saline Valley peaceably by any means, as many of the early settlers live to testify. In June, 1867, a party of "Dogs," as unauthorized bands of renegade Indians are called, made a raid down Spillman Creek and captured Mrs. Bacon, wife of David G. Bacon, Mrs. Shaw and her sister, Miss Foster. After subjecting them to the most brutal treatment the brutes could conceive they tied them hand and foot and staked them out on the prairie, where they were found nearly two days after by their friends who had escaped. As early as 1864 four buffalo hunters named Houston, Taylor, and brothers named Moffat were surprised in camp near Rocky Hill and killed by the Cheyennes.

It was at the mouth of Spillman Creek in this county, in August, 1868, that Martin Hendrickson found two little girls, aged six and nine years, who had been nearly three days without food. They proved to be the daughters of Aaron Bell, who had been captured near Beloit (see Mitchell County History). Mr. Hendrickson felt an uncontrollable impulse to go up the river six miles, and, although urged to remain at home by his family, he went, with the result stated. Mr. Hendrickson thinks an allwise Providence ordered him to go for the special purpose of saving the little ones.

On the 30th day of May, 1869, quite a large party of "Dogs" appeared in the Saline Valley and commenced their fiendish work. Their first victim was J. H. Strange, a son of J. S. Strange, one of the earliest settlers. Young Strange and a German boy named Smoots were hunting in the breaks of Spillman when the Indians came upon them and, professing to be good Pawnees, managed to get close enough to shoot Strange with an arrow, and crush his skull with a war club. Smoots ran for his life but was hit by a bullet from a rifle, from which wound he died shortly after. Two Danes were killed four miles west of Lincoln Center; and six miles up Spillman Creek a woman escaped, and an attempt to re-capture caused an Indian to brain her with a tomahawk. Mrs. Alderdice and her little child, six months old, and the wife of one of the Danes above mentioned, were captured. Mrs. A. was afterward killed by her captors, and on the second day of the retreat her little child was left hanging to a tree in sight of their camp. A four-year-old son of Mrs. A., named Willis Daly, was shot through the back by an arrow and his mother supposed him to be dead, but two days after the raid Thomas Noon found the boy, being attracted by his moans. The arrow had gone through his body and was sticking fast in his breast bone. In his struggles he had broken it off underneath the skin on his back. Philip Lautz and Washington Smith, by the aid of a pair of cobbler's pinchers, pulled out the arrow and saved the boy's life. In order to get hold of the arrow with the pinchers one pressed down on the boy's back until the arrow protruded from the inflamed wound. Willis Daly is now a resident of Lincoln County. Seven were killed and four wounded on this raid. (It is impossible to get the names of the Danes, as they were land-seekers and had not made their names known.)

The settlement of Lincoln County commenced in 1865 by George Green, E. E. Johnson, R. B. Clark, D. C. Skinner, J. M. Adams, Isaac DeGraff and W. E. Thompson. In the spring of 1866, about June 25, Washington Smith, W. T. Wild, John Dart and two young men named Peate and Gaskill became permanent residents of Lincoln. Oct. 4, 1866, M. D. Green, Martin and William Hendrickson, Volany Ball, John S. Strange, David G. Bacon, M. Zeigler, Thomas Noon, J. C. Parks and families settled throughout the county. For several years buffalo hunting was the chief pursuit.

COUNTY ORGANIZATION, ETC.

It was not until 1870 that any move was made toward a county organization. On the 6th of October of that year a meeting of the Special Board of County Commissioners appointed by the Governor for the purpose of organizing the county was held. Present: John S. Strange, Washington Smith and Isaac De Graff: F. A. Schermerhorn, Special Clerk.

The board divided the county into four townships and ordered an election Nov. 8, 1870. Colorado Township was composed of townships 12 and 13 in range 6.

Elkhorn was composed of townships 12 and 13 in range 7, and south half of township 12 in range 8, and south half of 12 in range 9 and south half of 12 in range 10, and townships 13 in ranges 8, 9 and 10.

Indiana Township comprised the congressional townships 10 and 11 in range 6, and 10 and 11 in range 7.

Salt Creek Township included townships 10 and 11 in range 6, and 10 and 11 in range 7.

The election resulted in the choice of the following county officers: County Commissioners, John S. Strange, Cornelius Delts, James Wild; County Clerk, A. S. Potter; County Treasurer, Volany Ball; Probate Judge, D. C. Skinner; Registrar of Deeds, Thomas Walls; Sheriff, R. B. Clark; Coroner, Francis Seibers; County Attorney, M. D. Green; Clerk of Court, J. A. Cook; Surveyor, Patrick Lowe; Superintendent of Public Instruction, John Lyden; Representative, Ira C. Buzick. In the county seat contest 158 votes were cast, of which Abram received 75; Lincoln Center, 58; Elkhorn, 10; northwest quarter of section 9, township 12, range 7, 15. The last named votes were not counted because the words "county seat" were not written thereon

The county-seat location turned out in Lincoln to be the source of much strife. In April, 1871, the Board of Commissioners were petitioned to call an election to re-locate. At their May meeting another additional petition was presented and both were laid over until the July meeting. At a special meeting June 10, called by order of Judge Canfield in a writ of mandamus demanding action of the board on the laid-over petitions, the petitions were rejected.

The town company of Abram presented the county with a deed to the lot on which the temporary court-house was then standing. On the 19th of February, 1872, an election was held to re-locate the county seat, at which 408 votes were cast. Lincoln Center received 232; Abram, 176.

During the time that the last election was pending a quarrel arose between Ezra Hubbard and John Haley in reference to a stick of timber which Hubbard was about to place in his mill then building just below Abram. The dispute grew fierce and Hubbard seized a carbine and shot and killed Haley. Hubbard was arrested and placed under guard at Abram, and in the evening a mob of forty men in several degrees of intoxication forced open the doors, wounded Hubbard and left him to die. Ascertaining shortly after that he was likely to recover, they again entered the building and, placing a stone under the wounded man's head, beat his brains out with a mallet. This incident was used as an argument for the removal of the county seat. Hon. Ira C. Buzick was tried for the murder of Hubbard and acquitted. The armed guard who had Hubbard in charge was, three years later, murdered and thrown in a well, where his body was discovered nearly three weeks afeer his disappearance. This murder, however, had no connection with the Haley-Hubbard affair of 1872.

On the first of April, 1873, bonds amounting to $4,000 were voted to build a court-house. The present county officers are: Commissioners, M. A. Jackson, J. S. Nygaard, James Little; Probate Judge, A. Artman; County Clerk, H. Hammer; Sheriff, Harry Trask; Registrar of Deeds, A. S. Robinson; Clerk of Court, J. D. Miller; County Treasurer, Ed. M. Harris; County Attorney, Geo. W. Finch; County Superintendent of Public Instruction, A. T. Biggs; Surveyor, Samuel Bloomfield; Coroner, Dr. Frank Coggswell. The Representatives in the State Legislature since the organization of the county have been in regular order: Ira C. Buzick, Alonzo Schermerhorn, George Green, Volany Ball, J. B. Goff, E. S. Pierce, Reuben Williams, W. S. Wait, George W. Anderson, R. F. Bryant.

Lincoln County has ever been ambitious to excel in school matters. The first school taught in the county was at the house of Martin Hendrickson in 1866 by Marion Ivy. The second school was taught in 1869 by David G. Bacon in a dugout near the same place. The first public school was in District No. 2, at Monroe, by Mrs. Skinner, in 1870. The county now has seventy-eight school districts with good comfortable buildings, valued at $19,250. The school expenses for the year ending July 31, 1882, were $10,935. The county has 2,868 children of school age, 2,267 of which are enrolled, and 1,510 of which are in daily attendance. The average salary of male teachers is $25 per month, and females, $22.

LINCOLN CENTER.

Lincoln Center, the county seat is located on the north side of the Saline River, about half a mile from the first bottom. It was originally platted on the 9th of May, 1871, and included the northwest quarter of section 6, township 12, range 7. The members of the Town Company at that time were: W. L. Gilmore, D. W. Henderson, J. S. Strange, Washington Smith, Thomas Boyle, S. M. Bobelette and James Askey. Efforts were made from time to time to re-locate the county seat, and in 1872 Lincoln Center became successful, and its success as a town assured. It did not assume municipal honors until the 23d of September, 1879, when Judge Prescott ordered an election for city officers under the act for the formation of cities of the third class. The result of this election proved favorable to the following: Mayor, George M. Lutes; Councilmen, D. E. Coolbaugh, George Green, Luther Stewart, H. Holcomb, Joseph E. Cheeney; Police Judge, Mortimer Gragg; Clerk, Lon A. Minx. The city has not found it necessary to indulge in any very extensive police or fire departments. The buildings in the business part of the town are nearly all of stone, of good style and well built; hence the feeling of security against fires. The present city officers are: Mayor, C. J. Brown; Councilmen, R. F. Bryant, W. S. McNitt, H. C. Angell, D. H. Malone, Thomas Thompson; Clerk, C. J. Wood.

Early in 1872, when it had become fairly settled that Lincoln Center was for all time to be the capital of the county, the people of School District No. 6 voted $3,500 in bonds for the erection of a handsome stone school-house, which was built the following summer. It is 38 x 42, two stories high, and built of magnesian limestone. The present School Board are: R. F. Bryant, C. G. Wood, J. B. Goff. The school is now enjoying an average daily attendance of 103 and is presided over by James Mallory, assisted by Mrs. Burress.

LOCAL MATTERS.

Lincoln County was without a paper from its organization in 1870 until March 8, 1873, when F. H. Barnhart, whose biography appears in the Osborne County History, commenced the publication of the Lincoln County News. April 3 he associated with himself in the publication of the News Mr. W. C. Busick, who afterward became County Clerk, and now resides at Sylvan Grove, in this county. Mr. Barnhart sold his interest in the News, Dec. 22, 1873, to Rev. P. Barker, who assumed editorial management of the paper and published it until Dec. 22, 1874. July 16, 1874, Barnhart commenced the publication of the Farmer, which he maintained until Jan. 1, 1875, when it was moved to Osborne, where it is now published by him.

The News passed into the hands of J. W. Newell early in 1875, and the following fall he moved it to Stockton, in Rooks County. At the time Mr. Barker abandoned the publication of the News, F. M. Beatty started a paper called the Western Democrat, which was continued under that name until June 15, 1875, when it was sold to G. W. Wellman, who changed the name to the Saline Valley Register, and made it the county paper until January, 1879, when it was sold to Messrs. Watson & Kime. During the last six months of the regime of Wellman, Albert Springer owned a half interest in the Register, and assisted editorially in its publication. Watson & Kime ran the paper until the following September, when it was sold to Hon. George W. Anderson, its present publisher.

On the first of December, 1879, Ira Lutes brought material from Illinois and commenced publication of the Lincoln Argus, which after seventeen weeks he sold to Hon. Walter S. Wait, who changed the name to the Beacon. It is now owned by Mr. Wait, who is assisted in the editorial work by his wife and son, A. H. Wait.

The press on which the News, the Democrat and the Register were printed was brought to St. Mary's Mission, in Kansas, and the St Mary's Star, one of the first papers in Kansas, printed thereon. It is now at Cain City, in Ellsworth County. Mr. P. Barker, the second editor of the News, was aged about fifty years, and a native of the State of New York, where he had studied for the ministry. He came to this county from Chicago, where he had been a local preacher for the Methodist Episcopal church for many years. He often occupied the pulpits of his church at various places in this county. While publishing the News at Lincoln, he also published papers for Brookville and Wilson, on the Kansas Pacific Railway. He is now a resident of the State of New Jersey.

A Presbyterian Church was organized in Lincoln Center in June, 1874, by the Rev. H. C. Bradbury, who was for several years its Pastor. The church building, an elegant stone edifice, was commenced in 1875, and dedicated in July, 1879. It is valued at $3,500. The church numbers some thirty-five members, the following named being the present Trustees: D. E. Coolbaugh, Pres.; Geo. M. Lutes, Capt. J. T. Smith, C. J. Brown, John Stein.

The Vesper Presbyterian Church, in Pleasant Township, is also in charge of Rev. H. C. Bradbury. This class contains twenty-four members and was organized Sept. 8, 1878. They have no church building. A Sabbath-school is regularly held with an average attendance of seventy-five scholars.

The Blue Stem Presbyterian, in the southwestern part of the county, was organized in March, 1882, and now has twenty-eight members and a regular Sabbath-school of eighty-five scholars. Rev. H. C. Bradbury is also the pastor of this church.

Rev. John Kelley, of Ellsworth, was instrumental in founding a class and building a Catholic Church at this place. The congregation numbers over 300, and services are held monthly. They have a plain frame building in the northwest part of the city erected at an expense of $1,000.

The M. E. Church society was organized in this city in the fall of 1872. It now numbers 115 members. The first pastor was Rev. J. D. Mattson. They have built no house of worship, but regular services are held each Sabbath in the commodious hall in Cummings's Bank Building. The children and members assist in maintaining the Union Sunday-school. Rev. J. M. Miller is the present pastor. Arrangements are being made to build a church during the year 1883.

The Bible Christian Church society was organized in Lincoln Center in the winter of 1876. It now numbers twenty-one members, and is under the care and pastoral guidance of Rev. J. S. Strange. The Baptist Church is used as their regular house of worship. Their Sabbath-school scholars attend the Union Sabbath-school.

A Lutheran Church was organized Dec. 17, 1881, with a membership of thirteen, Rev. J. A. Bright, pastor. They are at present occupying the Baptist Church, a frame edifice on Main street, which is not now needed by the Baptists as the society has moved away in detail until only one of the original members remains a resident of Lincoln.

At Denmark, in Salt Creek Township, the Lutherans have a church building which cost about $1,500, and was built in 1880. The society was organized in 1877, and now numbers about forty-two members.

The various churches of Lincoln Center have formed a Union Sabbath-school which is held regularly every Sunday in the Presbyterian Church. Capt. J. T. Smith is the popular and able Superintendent who keeps up the interest in the work. The average attendance is seventy-five. They have a well-patronized library.

The National Woman's Suffrage Association, an auxiliary branch of which was formed in Lincoln in 1881. At present writing the officers are: Mrs. Emily Biggs, President; Mrs. E. Lutes, Vice-President; Mrs. Anna C. Wait, Secretary. This auxiliary numbers sixty-five members, and has two auxiliaries in the county, one at Pinon postoffice and the other at Tower Springs.

Lincoln Intrenchment, No. 62, of the Sir Knights of the Grand Army of the Union, was organized in this city in December, 1881. It now has enrolled over sixty members, of whom D. H. Malone is Colonel-Commanding, and Chas. G. Wood, Adjutant.

Center Lodge, I. O. O. F., was organized in Lincoln, March 23, 1874. The lodge has grown in wealth until now its property is valued at $500, and has twenty-eight members. The present officers are: D. B. Day, N. G.; Geo. M. Lutes, V. G.; S. A. Alton, Sec.; S. Holcomb, Treas.

Lincoln Center has only developed as a trading point, but in this particular is a town of considerable note. Several large stores of considerable pretentions in regard to size of buildings and greater as regards stocks carried are scattered about the town. Nearly all the business houses are built of stone while the majority of the dwellings are frame. South of town a handsome iron bridge spans the Saline River. It was built and put in place by the King Bridge Company, of Kansas City, and the towns of Elkhorn and Indianas have put up their bonds in the sum of $4,000 in payment for the same.

Just above the bridge is the handsome and substantial stone mill building, commenced in the year 1872 by Elias Rees. The mill is now complete and the estate of E. Rees values the property at $12,500. The mill contains four run of stone and has every later improvement for custom mills. A dwelling and store building adjacent causes the crossing at the bridge to have the appearance of a town.

OTHER TOWNS.

Rocky Hill is a natural town which sprang up a few rods east of the old paper town of Abram, which was for a brief time the county seat. The most important industry in this town is the flouring mill of Graham Bros., which was commenced in 1871 by Ezra Hubbard, and was the first mill in the county, and now is one of the good ones; it contains three run of burrs, and is valued at $7,000. Quite a trade has centered about the mill, and several stores and numerous good and substantial dwellings mark an embryo town. In February, 1881, the county of Lincoln voted $75,000 in bonds to aid in building the Topeka, Salina & Western Railroad through the county. The arrival of this road will make Rocky Hill a place of importance.

In Colorado Township the firm of D. Hardesty have a good flouring custom mill in operation, with two run of stones, for which the Saline River furnishes the power. This firm has already expended $5,000 in making this a good property and contemplates still further expenses and improvements.

Sylvan Grove is the name of a rural town in Pleasant Township, at which a postoffice was established in 1873. The most important industry here is the flouring mill of Merriman & Masterson. This place is located fourteen miles west of the center and county capital, and the above mentioned mill is a nucleus about which gathers quite a large business. The mill contains, and operates both night and day, three run of stones. The reputation their flour has obtained makes it one of the better flouring mills of the West.

Pottersburg was laid out and platted by A. S. Potter in June of 1874. This little city is in the center of the coal region of Lincoln County. It is located at the confluence of Bacon and Spillman creeks and on the line of the proposed Topeka, Salina & Western Railroad.

An organized class of the Methodist Episcopal Church is here in prosperous condition. It was organized in 1875 and now numbers over seventy members, with a Sabbath-school of 148 registered scholars in average attendance. The Rev. Ira G. Morrill is the present pastor.

Abram.—It would scarcely be just to omit a mention of this town, although at present it does not exist. It was the first county seat and was platted, as the records show, in April, 1871, embracing the northwest quarter of Section 9, Township 12, Range 7. Myron D. Green, heretofore referred to as first County Attorney, was the president of the town company; but the fates which control the settlement of all new countries decided that this town should die—and it died.

OTTAWA COUNTY.

OTTAWA County, organized in 1866, is situated on the west side of the sixth principal meridian, 125 miles west of the Missouri River, and in the third tier of counties from the north. It is bounded on the north by Cloud County, on the east by Clay, on the south by Saline, and on the west by Lincoln and Mitchell counties. It is twenty-four miles north and south, by thirty east and west, and contains 460,800 acres. It is one of the best counties in Central and Western Kansas, having a rich soil, desirable location, being most admirably watered, and possessing a good supply of timber, and an abundance of excellent building stone, red sandstone, and limestone. It is watered by the Solomon and Saline rivers, and numerous creeks. The Solomon, with a broad and exceedingly fertile valley, flows diagonally from the northwest to the southeast, through the center of the county, affording extensive water power. It has in most places a deep channel, with a solid gravel or stone bottom, and a constant supply of water, requisites of a good manufacturing stream. Its principal tributaries from the north are: Buckeye, Coal, Sand, Lindsey, Pipe, Yockey and Mortimer creeks; from the south or west: Salt, Spring and Sloan creeks. The largest of them are Salt and Pipe creeks, the former being of considerable size and importance. The Saline River runs diagonally across the southwestern corner of the county, watering Culver Township. It is quite as large a stream as the Solomon. Along the rivers and most of the creeks there is a good supply of timber, principally cottonwood and elm; but oak, box elder, walnut, ash and huckleberry are also found in all parts of the county

Coal has been discovered in various parts of the county, principally along Coal Creek. No mines have been thoroughly tested to ascertain the extent of the supply, which doubtless is quite limited. There are a number of salt springs along the two rivers and Salt Creek, whose waters are highly impregnated with saline matter. An excellent quality of red sandstone is found in great abundance along the streams. It is quite soft when first quarried, but, with exposure, oxidizes, and becomes very hard. It is found in a great variety of shades, which, when artistically arranged, make a very handsome wall. There is also an abundance of limestone, which is very soft and easily worked when first quarried, but hardens with exposure. An excellent quality of brick clay, and clay for pottery and stoneware, is found and utilized in the southern part of the county.

The "City of Rocks" is situated two and a half miles southwest of Minneapolis, on the opposite side of the Solomon Valley, and half way up the bordering hills. It once consisted of several hundred round and oval-shaped rocks, one half of which are now quite perfectly preserved. The remainder are broken, and the fragments somewhat scattered, yet every piece shows the original sphericity. They vary in size from two to fifteen feet in diameter. The stone is a white, flinty sandstone, and is in thin layers or shales. The City of Rocks is one of the most interesting natural curiosities in the State, and to every visitor the question of its origin is puzzling. It is claimed by some that the rocks belong to the cretaceous period; that they have been worn into their present globular shape by the action of the water. The most satisfactory answer is, that when the land was submerged a tribe of marine insects gathered here in spherical masses, in and around which solidified white, shifting sand. There is one place in Lincoln, the adjoining county west, where a similar formation is found, but the specimens are not so numerous nor so perfectly preserved. The imperfectness of the specimens there has caused greater diversity of theory in reference to the mysterious natural exhibition. But whether the true theory is found or not, every visitor will gaze with admiration and wonder on the City of Rocks.

One third of the land in the county is valley, and two thirds table or gently rolling table land, making it an agricultural and stock-raising section. The valley lands are exceedingly fertile, the soil consisting of the alluvial deposits common along Western rivers. There are a great many fine farms on the uplands which yield large crops of grain; yet they are better adapted to grazing, as they are more subject to drought than the valley lands. The soil of the uplands, a dark mold, is from six inches to three feet in depth.

EARLY EXPLORATIONS.

The early travelers and gold hunters found this country in the possession of the Kaw Indians, a tribe not so treacherous and bloodthirsty as the Sioux and Pawnee. The first white men to venture into this Indian haunted frontier to commence the noble work of winning the country from its thralldom of barbarism were William Still, George Darling, and a Frenchman named La Pere. In May, 1855 they built a cabin near the mouth of Coal Creek (then Myer's) and cultivated a garden that year. They were a part of the Reader colony, the larger portion of which settled at Solomon City, at the junction of the Solomon and Smoky Hill rivers. At this time they were almost beyond the frontier, and within the Indians' hunting grounds. The settlements of safety were many miles east. In June, 1855, a party from Ohio explored the Solomon Valley, with the design of selecting a location for a large colony from that State, but the Sioux war on the Smoky Hill River, and the fact of the Kansas River not being navigable, caused them to abandon their design and seek a location less liable to invasion from the Indians. Of the first three settlers in the county, La Pere was probably killed by the savages. The Sioux were in camp on the Saline River, and to them he went on a friendly visit, but never returned In 1855–'56 the Sioux war and border ruffian troubles had the effect of checking the great immigration in prospect for the valleys west of the Kansas River. In the fall of 1857 Mr. Myers, who gave the name to the creek, came into Ottawa County, but settled on Turkey Creek, Dickinson County. In the fall of 1858 Wm. Frost located near the mouth of Coal Creek. During this same season a number of settlers took claims, but did not permanently locate until in the spring of 1859, when the following came into Ottawa County: S. M. Wright, one and a half miles north of Minneapolis; E. W. Branch, just adjoining the town site; Jacob Humburger, four miles northeast, on Pipe Creek; H. R. Little and Josiah Hocker, adjacent to Wm. Frost's old claim, near the mouth of Coal Creek and the eastern boundary line of Ottawa County. Messrs. Wright and Branch built the first cabins occupied by families in the county, and their wives were the first white women who entered its limits for the purpose of making homes there. In 1857–'58 the hunters and trappers who visited Solomon Valley gave names to many of its creeks. For some unexplained reason these wayfarers left a wagon-load of plunder behind them, just above Minneapolis, for the ownership of which a lawsuit was subsequently tried in the District Court, at Junction City. Judging from the evidence there produced, the "gentlemen" who gave Fisher, Lindsey, Brown and Chriss creeks their names, were not the most savory morsels of humanity in the world. Most of the names of these Solomon Valley creeks have since been changed—in respect to the living. The great drought of 1860 checked immigration. In the fall of 1861 came the Indian scare. Mr. Still moved down into Dickinson County with his family; Messrs. Humburger and Darling into Saline, and the Branches went East to live. Mr. Wright, who had also fled, returned in the fall of 1863, as did Mr. Still. During the early part of 1864 the Indians became again very troublesome. Their raids were frequent in adjoining counties, and some of the settlers in Ottawa County lost their lives. In the spring of 1864 six settlers in Saline, Ottawa and Mitchell counties lost their lives. This induced a number of them to band themselves together for protection. Israel Markley, S. M. Wright, J. C. Boblett, J. C. Stull, A. and S. Z. Boss, Thomas Dalrymple, Chapman, H. S. Wooden, J. M. Jones, Al and Ed Scheilenbrand and others built Fort Solomon, which stood on the river near the present residence of Hon. E. Holingsworth. Log houses were also built in the form of a square, and enclosed with palisades. Inside of the enclosure was a good well, and every precaution was taken to be prepared for a long siege, which, fortunately, the settlers were not obliged to endure. The majority of the people in the county at this time lived in these houses from the summer of 1864 to the spring of 1865. Major-General Custis gave the unpretentious garrison a noted little gun, known as "Jim Lane's Pocket Piece." It is still in the county, a souvenir of those days.

In the year 1865 the county received an influx of discharged soldiers, coming to take advantage of their soldiers' claims. This rapid increase in population induced Israel Markley and J. C. Boblett to build the Elkhorn saw and flour mill, the first of the kind in the county, in 1864–'65. With the exception of horse-stealing, comparative quiet and peace prevailed in this county from 1865 until 1868. Up to this time only one man was known to have been killed by the Indians. His name was Peter Miller. A band of Pawnees came to his place, the farm now owned by Levi Yonkey, in July, 1862, and killed him and plundred his cabin. The Cheyennes, Kiawas, Arapahoes and Sioux used to congregate at the "Great Spirit" spring, "Waconda," and from there make raids on the Republican, Solomon and Saline Valleys. The town Wauconda, on the Solomon River, in Mitchell County, is situated near, and named after, this spring. Early in the morning of August 12, 1868, the Indians came pouring into the valley of the Solomon, and during the three succeeding days laid waste the fair settlements as far down as Yonkey's farm, which was in the northwestern part of the county. There were none killed, however, in Ottawa, but in Mitchell and Cloud counties their victims were many. C. C. Clark was attacked just below Delphos, as he was retreating down the valley, with his family in his wagon, but by fast driving, with his reins in one hand and his revolver in the other, he kept the cowards at bay and reached Minneapolis in safety. On the fourteenth of the following October another raid was made through Ottawa County, which was far more disastrous than the one of August. A large amount of stock was driven off, all the household plunder they could carry stolen, four lives taken, and one woman carried away captive. The victims were Peter Karns, old Mr. Smith, John Andrews and Alexander Smith. A Mr. Morgan was severely wounded, and his wife carried away into captivity, from which she was not released for eight long monthe. Mr. Morgan had gone to gather corn on D. Mortimer's farm, which is close to the river in the northern part of the county, and was in the field when attacked. The attack was so sudden that he did not have time to unhitch his team, which he was in the act of doing when the savages approached him. He left the horses partly unhitched and ran for the river, pursued by one of the Indians, who wounded his victim just as he reached the bank. Morgan fell, rolled over the bank, and was left as dead. In the meantime one of the horses freed himself and started for home, followed by the Indians with the other horse, and what they needed of the harness. Mrs. Morgan, seeing the lone horse and supposing the team had run away and perhaps killed her husband, was returning to the field with the animal when she met the Indians and was taken captive. It was a grand reunion when she returned, for she found her husband alive whom she had believed to be dead, and he found the noble wife he had begun to believe was not among the living. As the Indians were pursuing Mr. Smith, whom they killed, they came upon Mr. Virtue, whom they felled with a spear and left for dead, but he was only slightly injured. On the 9th of June, 1869, they made a raid on Summerville. They surrounded Captain Pierce's house, but his son and Ben Markley succeeded in keeping them out of the building. About the same time they burned the Smithville postoffice and killed two young men—Messrs. Dyer and John Wier. These last raids were made principally for plunder. The Indians in the last raid were pursued by a band of settlers. The same day John Lyon, Hendershot, Sticklet and others pursued some thieving Indians ten miles and killed one of their number, but failed to secure the stolen property.

On the 14th of August, 1868, Governor Crawford was telegraphed the situation at midnight, and in four hours he was in Salina, and on the night of the 15th stopped at Asher Creek. His influence caused the General Government to send out, under Generals Sheridan and Custer, the expedition that recaptured Mrs. Morgan and Miss White. The latter was taken from Cloud County one month before Mrs. Morgan was captured. Her father was killed at the same time. There were no more raids into the county, but it was two or three years before the fear of incursions really passed away.

The first settlers in Ottawa County were William Still, George Darling and La Pere, a Frenchman. They built a cabin in May, 1855, near the mouth of Coal Creek, and cultivated a garden, but the Sioux war induced them to leave in the fall.

The first permanent settlers came in 1859. They were S. M. Wright, E. W. Branch, Jacob Humburger, H. R. Little and Josiah Hocker.

The first white women in the county were Mrs. S. M. Wright and Mrs. E. W. Branch, who located with their husbands in 1859.

The first birth in the county occurred in 1859. The parents were Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Wright, to whom a son was born.

The first death was that of Mrs. E. W. Branch. Her demise occurred on the 13th of August, 1859, soon after occupying her new home, and by her request she was buried on the present site of the Minneapolis Cemetery.

Matilda Jones and W. D. Bruce were the first couple married in Ottawa County, this event occurring in 1865. They were married in old Fort Solomon.

The first school was taught at Concord, in 1864, by Miss Charlotte Ingersoll.

The first sermon was preached by Rev. J. H. Hawley, of the Methodist denomination, in 1865. Most of the citizens were present at this first religious gathering. It was held at Mrs. Boss's log cabin at Fort Solomon.

Seymour Ayers and John Knight, appointed in 1864, were the first Justices of the Peace in the county.

The first Postmasters were S. Z. Boss and J. C. Boblett, appointed in 1864, the former for Bennington and the latter for Ayersburg.

The first physician, Dr. McHenry, came in 1867.

The first mill, at Elkhorn, was built by Israel Markley and J. C. Boblett, in 1865.

Colonel John Kerwin started the first store at Fort Solomon in 1866.

Jerome Ingersoll was the first lawyer, locating at Bennington in 1865.

The Legislature of 1860 bounded the county and named it after the Ottawa tribe of Indians. From that time up to 1865 Ottawa, with Clay, Dickinson, Saline and all the unorganized territory west of these counties, was attached to Davis County for judicial purposes. R H. Little, of Ottawa, was a member of the first grand jury that sat at Junction City, and Isaac Markley was defendant to the first suit docketed in the District Court, under State laws, when Ottawa was a part of Davis County. Mr. Markley gained his suit. The Legislature of 1865 attached Ottawa to Saline County for judicial purposes. Dickinson and Saline counties had been organized, and the change was made for the convenience of the people. S. Z. Boss was appointed Justice for Ottawa.

In July, 1866, Seymour Ayers prepared the papers for the organization of the county, it having, supposedly, the required population of 500. Governor Samuel J. Crawford completed the work by appointing Amassa May, Henry Dresher and A. J. Willis, County Commissioners; J. H. Ingersoll, County Clerk; and designating Ayersburg as the county seat until the people should choose for themselves. The first election took place in the following November; result as follows: Commissioners, G. R. Ingersoll, A. H. Boss and Silas Seaman; County Clerk, H S Wooden; Treasurer, Geo. Culver; Sheriff, D. Pierce; and J. H. Ingersoll, County Attorney.

Minneapolis and Lindsey were candidates for county seat honors. They are equally distant from the exact center of the county. As stated, the Governor designated Ayersburg as the county seat until the people should select a place. This was done in the fall of 1866, the vote resulting in favor of Minneapolis. The votes of 1870 and 1872 resulted also in giving the county seat to that city, and the question is, probably, permanently settled.

The county rents buildings in Minneapolis for the county offices; a square has been set apart whereon to erect a substantial court-house as soon as the county becomes sufficiently settled and wealthy. The poor farm is well supplied with buildings.

The Solomon Valley Railroad, a branch of the Kansas Pacific, runs along the Solomon River, from Solomon City to Beloit, where it connects with the Central Branch R. R. It was built to Minneapolis in 1877 and extended to Beloit in 1879 and 1880. The county issued $100,000 worth of bonds in aid of the Solomon Valley Railroad.

With the exception of the year 1874, the insects have not very materially injured the crops of the county, not having proved so detrimental to its financial prosperity as an insufficent amount of rainfall. For some time the question of a sufficient supply of moisture to produce good crops was a serious one, and many have come and gone on account of not being able to stay and try the experiment. With the exception of 1860, the drought has never destroyed both the early and late crops. This section, however, is more subject to droughts than that further east, being nearer the dry plains of the West.

Ottawa County has been visited by three cyclones since 1878. The first occurred the 30th of May, 1879, and passed in a northeasterly direction, entering the county from the southwest. It did no damage until it reached the valley of Salt Creek, from which point it was very destructive, until it passed the northern line of this county, beyond which point it seems to have done no material damage. Within this short distance of about twelve miles the fields were laid waste, twenty dwellings blown to pieces or badly wrecked, and six lives lost, besides considerable damage being occasioned to stock and fowls. The loss of property, not including crops, was estimated at over $15,000. The names of those killed are Katie Krone and her sisters, Mrs. Vosh and Mrs. Anna Vosh; Mr. McCalmot, and a traveler by the name of Jacob Garber, from Center County, Pa., who had taken shelter from the storm under one of Mr. Krone's sheds. There were a number of other persons seriously injured. On the night of the 10th of June, just ten days after the cyclone above mentioned, the flourishing village of Delphos, twelve miles northwest of Minneapolis, was partially destroyed by a huricane. It commenced at Cawker City and continued down the course of the Solomon River, greatly devastating the center of Ottawa County. At the time it struck Delphos—about 10 o'clock—the citizens of Minneapolis were gathered at an ice-cream festival for the benefit of the sufferers of the former cyclone. The charitable entertainment was not disturbed, as the hurricane passed to the north. Thirty-three houses were totally destroyed at Delphos, which was fully one half of the town and included almost its entire business portion. It is remarkable that no lives were lost, but this is due to the fact that the lesson of the cyclone was fresh in the minds of the citizens, as they were within two miles of its path, and when they saw the threatening cloud and heard the fearful rumble and roar of the maddened elements, they sought safety in cellars. The damage to property was about $26,000. The path of the hurricane, which was here much wider than that of the cyclone, crossed the latter at right angles about two miles southeast of Delphos, and destroyed two new dwellings that were rising from the ruins of the cyclone.

On the 9th of June, 1881, two years after the storm last mentioned, the southern part of the county was visited by a cyclone. The course of the storm was toward the east, and just after crossing the Saline, one mile north of the county line, it took the form of a cyclone, continuing thus for about four miles. Within that distance, in the order given, the houses of Messrs. Powell, Phillips, Frothingham, Peters and Davis were all destroyed. Mr. Parker's, only a part of which stood within the path of the cyclone, partially escaped. There were three occupants of Mr. L. F. Frothingham's house: himself and wife, Mary T., and Mr. George Combs, her cousin, all of whom were killed outright; the timbers of the house were scattered for miles. The body of Mr. Frothingham was found 450 feet from the site of the house, terribly mutilated and disfigured, the end of a board having been driven half way through his head. Mrs. Frothingham was thrown about seventy-five yards, her face and head badly bruised, and her cousin was still nearer the house—not so disfigured, but dead. They must have been killed at once. Some of the other families were severely injured, but all recovered. The cyclone lost its rotary motion and force within three miles of Bennington. It was accompanied by very heavy hail.

SCHOOLS AND COUNTY ROSTER.

The first school in the county was taught at Concord, in 1864, by Miss Charlotte Ingersoll. It was very small, as the school population was not more than twenty at that time. It is now about 4,000. The schools are numerous, and generally in an advanced and flourishing condition. The buildings are good, and the latest and most approved text books and school apparatus are used. There are over eighty organized districts, with nearly as many good school-houses. The total valuation of all school property is about $50,000.

MINNEAPOLIS.

The "City of Waters," as its name implies, the pleasant and progressive and beautifully situated metropolis and county seat of Ottawa, occupies a central position in the county, on the banks of the famous Solomon River, and on the line of the Solomon Valley Railroad. The town site is one of the finest and most beautiful in the State. Pipe Creek is on the northwest, and Salt Creek here flows parallel to the Solomon a short distance to the south. By these streams the name Minneapolis, the City of Waters, was suggested. The course of the river, the lay of the land, and the view so resemble those of Beatrice, Neb., that one city might have been modeled after the other. The town site is about fifty feet above the bed of the river, and is quite rolling, with the exception of the principal business portion. From the more elevated portions of the town, grand and picturesque views can be obtained of the surrounding country. To the north, on a clear day, the view extends thirty-five miles. The Solomon and Salt Creek valleys, teeming with the fruits of agriculture, can be traced for miles to the west, northwest and southeast; and across the river, two and a half miles to the southwest, half-way up the bluffs that enclose the valley of the Solomon, appears the wonderful City of Rocks. At the foot of the main street, running north and south, a graceful iron bridge spans the river, supported by stone abutments thirty feet in height. Just above the bridge is the mill-dam.

The residence portion of the town is built up with neat and comfortable dwellings, ornamented by lawns and beds of flowers, and a few of them with shade trees. The business portion has a number of good stone business blocks, built of the red sandstone so abundant along the Solomon River. This stone has a great variety of shades, which, when properly arranged, makes a very handsome wall. It is very soft when first quarried, but by exposure becomes hard and durable.

Minneapolis was laid out in 1866 by Israel Markley, Elijah Smith, Dr. James McHenry, A. C. Stull and A. J. Smith, all of whom but one (Elijah Smith) are still residents of the town. Ayersburg was designated as the county seat by the Governor, but at the first election, in the fall of 1866, Minneapolis secured that honor. In 1870, and also in 1872, the county-seat question was before the people, who decided at the polls in favor of Minneapolis. In 1871 it was made a city of the third class. It grew slowly, but steadily, until 1878, when the Solomon Valley Railroad reached the place, and it rapidly increased in business and population. It now has a population of about 1,200.

The people are energetic and industrious, the business class consisting principally of young men of means and ability, who, by hard work and square dealing, have made Minneapolis a growing commercial point. To show the amount of business transacted, it is only necessary to state that from $25,000 to $30,000 are annually paid in freights, and that about 500 cars of stock and grain are shipped from this point every year. Flour is about the only article of manufacture, but there is an abundance of water-power, and in time it may become considerable of a manufacturing town.

HOTELS, BANKS, ETC.

The place is supplied with three hotels, excellent houses for the size of the place. The Commercial House was established in 18[illegible]0 by the present proprietor, J. W. Tom. The Colver House, L. M. Sumner proprietor, was established in 1878; and in 1879 the Truesdell House was opened by J. T. Nichols. They are above the average of Western hotels.

The Bank of Minneapolis was established in 1875 by J. P. Cummins. J. H. Hannah is the Cashier. J. W. Smith & Co., bankers, established their bank in July, 1880. It has a paid up capital of $20,000. The Ottawa County Bank, established in July, 1880, by the bank company, of which A. N. Schuster is President and T. M. Sexton Cashier. The bank stock is $50,000. It has a very attractive and substantial bank building, valued with its furniture at $5,000.

The water-power at this point, which is estimated at about 200 horse-power, is the property of Israel Markley, one of the early settlers. The flouring mill stands on the bank, under which a flume 100 feet is run through solid rock. Another flume, 1,000 feet in length, has been made through the sandstone bed that underlies the town, emptying into the stream below. This operates a wheel in the railroad district, which furnishes power for two elevators, a saw-mill and for pumping water for the railroad tank. Mr. Markley built the grist-mill in 1866-'67, the saw-mill having been erected, as stated, by himself and Mr. Boblett, in 1865. The grist-mill has three run of burrs.

The Minneapolis Opera House, 44 x 90 feet, with a sixteen foot-ceiling, was built in 1880 by a joint stock company. It is an ornament to the town, and a popular place for entertainments.

The people of Minneapolis have a high standard of general intelligence, and are energetic and zealous in the interests of their town. They have, as a unit, taken great interest in the cause of education. Great progress has been made. The public schools of the town, consisting of five departments, are in a flourishing condition. The discipline is good and a high standard of excellence is attained in scholarship.

CHURCHES, THE PRESS AND SOCIETIES.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1871, properly, although the members held some meetings in 1870. The first quarterly meeting was held in November, 1871, the first pastor being Rev. D. D. Baird. The present stone church was built in 1878, at a cost of about $8,000. The society contains about 185 members, and the church is prosperous in every particular.

The Baptist Church was organized May 9, 1872, with fifteen members. The frame church, valued at $1,500, was dedicated May 4, 1879. The church is in a harmonious and progressive condition, with seventy-five members. Rev. Milo Smith is the present pastor.

DELPHOS.

Delphos is a flourishing town of about 400 inhabitants, situated twelve miles northwest of Minneapolis, in the Solomon Valley, and on the line of the Solomon Valley Railroad. The town has a very pleasant location, one half of a mile from the river, not low, nor over-elevated, but occupying a happy medium. The town site was laid out by W. A. Kiser on his land in 1869-'70, but the town did not commence to assume the proportions of a village even, until 1878, when the prospect of a railroad became a certainty. The Solomon Valley Railroad reached the town in October, 1879. During 1879-'80 Delphos grew more rapidly than before or after that date. The business and residence portions of the town suggest a much older place, it having a larger number of good buildings than most towns of its size in the State. Considering its size, it is the best business point in the county. The surrounding country is fertile and quite well settled, which makes Delphos an extensive grain and stock market.

On the thirtieth of June, 1879, the cyclone that visited Ottawa County passed just two miles east of the town, and ten days after, while they were yet caring for the sufferers of that terrible disaster, a hurricane swept away one half of the new village. Fortunately no lives were lost, and before the close of the year all the buildings but one were erected, and fifty new ones added, making a total of eighty-two structures built from June 10, 1879, to the close of the year.

The Bank of Delphos was established by F. M. Sexton in 1880. The Pacific and Commercial hotels, established respectively in 1879 and 1880, are well maintained. The flouring and saw mills owned by White, Towner & Co., and operated by water-power, are the only manufactories in the town. A large amount of the water-power here is not yet utilized.

The Delphos Herald, a weekly newspaper, was established by the proprietor, D. B. Londen, in 1879. It is an excellent county paper and well edited. It is the only paper published in the county, outside of Minneapolis.

Delphos Lodge, No. —, I. O. O. F., was instituted in 1879. In connection with the Masons they own a commodious and well furnished hall. Officers: Wm. A. Hillhouse, N. G.; James Hollis, Sec.

Delphos Lodge, No. 148, A., F. & A. M., was instituted in 1879. It has a good working membership, and owns a half interest in a good hall. Van E. Butler, W. M.; G. N. Billings, Sec.

The Independent Order of Good Templars is one of the strongest in this part of the State. It was organized in 1879. It meets in the Good Templars' Hall, which is owned by a joint stock company.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, organized in 1874. The building was greatly damaged by the hurricane of June 10, 1879. Rev. T. J. Ream is pastor.

The Baptists meet in the school-house, but are contemplating the erection of a church building. They organized in 1878. Rev. Milo Smith is the present pastor.

The Presbyterians meet in the M. E. church. It organized in 1879. Rev. Newton Bracken is pastor.

The Universalists were the first to build a church, which was used by all the denominations at first. It was destroyed by the storm of 1879, but has been rebuilt, in more substantial form. Rev. Joy Bishop is the pastor.

The Spiritualists organized their society in January, 1877, with thirteen members. It now numbers ninety-two. It has no creed, but subscribes to the motto, "The obtaining and promulgating of knowledge as a means of promoting the physical and moral development of mankind."

The Catholics have a good church and hold meetings every two weeks. Rev. Frederick is pastor. There are about forty families in the parish.

The public school of Delphos, which is now graded, is in good condition. The town has been very unfortunate with its school-houses. The hurricane of the 9th of June, 1879, destroyed one. Another was destroyed by fire. The money for building the present house was loaned the district by the citizens. It is a good two-story building, with belfry and bell, and supplied with excellent furniture.

Considering its misfortunes, and the fact that it was not the county seat, Delphos has made the most remarkable growth of any town in Ottawa County.

BENNINGTON.

Bennington was not laid out until 1878, the year the Solomon Valley Railroad reached this point; but a store was established here in the winter of 1872-'3 by Geo. P Parker. Bennington is situated nine miles southeast of Minneapolis and one mile north of the Solomon River. The country immediately surrounding the town is bottom land, and, as it extends to the north and east, it becomes rolling, but not broken. South of the river the land is more hilly, but there is sufficient land to make valuable farms. The country is well settled with an excellent class of farmers. In 1878, Messrs. Daniel Struble and C. Nelson laid out the town on portions of their adjoining farms, a quarter of a mile east of the store of Mr. Parker, established in 1873.

The town has been quite prosperous, having attained a population of over 200 in three years. An excellent iron bridge, costing $4,500, spans the Solomon at this point. Markley Brothers' flouring and saw mill, run by water-power, and costing over $20,000, has been of great advantage to the town. The first school was taught in 1879, and in 1880 a $2,000 frame school-house was built. It is well furnished and well attended. The Presbyterians and Methodists have established church organizations. Rev. W. C. Scott is pastor of the former and Rev. J. Pettinger of the latter. The Methodists are erecting a $2,200 church building.

Bennington M. E. Church was formed at the house of Daniel Struble, northeast of where the town now is, in 1871, by the Rev. J. Kahler, of Abilene, about June 1 of that year. The class consisted of the families of Capt. Spitzer and W. W. Walker, who was leader. Meetings were held first in the house of Mr. Struble, then in a school-house near the present site of Bennington, then moved to a temporary school-house three miles north, and during the winter in private dwellings, mostly at Mr. Walker's, until the erection of the Stanton School-house, where the meetings were held. At the next annual conference the class formed a part of the Minneapolis work, and the Sabbath-school was organized. Rev. John Madison, of Solomon, supplied the work for some time, and held two successful protracted meetings during the winters of his three years' pastorate, which added considerably to the membership. In 1880 the place of meeting was moved to Bennington, and in 1882-'83, through the successful efforts of Rev. J. Pettinger, pastor in charge, the membership was increased to over fifty, and a nice frame church was erected at a cost of about $2,200, and a Sabbath-school organized, which is in a flourishing condition. Rev. W. S. R. Bennett now has charge of the work.

BOUNDARIES AND TOPOGRAPHY.

BUTLER, the largest organized county in the State, may well be called "the State of Butler." Within its lines lies more territory than that of some of the Eastern States, while its arable land amounts to nearly as much as that of two of the smaller ones. From north to south it stretches forty-two miles, and from east to west thirty-four and a half; making a total area of about one million acres. It is named in honor of Andrew P. Butler, for twelve years United States Senator from South Carolina.

Butler County, as defined geographically in the legislative act of 1855, was a region thirty miles square, the northeast corner of which was the southeast corner of the present Morris County, then called Wise. The same act designated the region immediately south of the original Butler, a tract thirty miles east and west, and about seventy-eight miles north and south, to the southern boundary line of the Territory, as Hunter County. The act of 1857, made Butler to consist of a tract thirty miles wide, directly south of Wise (Morris) County, extending southward thirty-eight miles. Hunter was made to consist of the section south of Butler to the Territorial line.

An act was passed February 11, 1859, organizing the counties of Wise, Butler and Chase. Chase was made of the region south of Wise, twenty-four miles, by thirty miles east and west. The fifth standard parallel was then the south boundary of Butler County.

Irving County was erected February 27, 1860, out of the region commencing where the fifth standard and guide meridian cross, between ranges 8 and 9, west thirty-six and north twenty-four miles. Eldorado was the temporary county seat.

February 24, 1864, Butler was made to include the region from the northwest corner of Township 22, Range 1, south on the sixth meridian to State line, east to line between Ranges 9 and 10 east; north to northeast corner Township 23; west to northeast corner Township 23, Range 5 east; north to northeast corner Township 22, Range 5 east; thence to place of beginning.

The southern boundary of Chase was extended to the northern boundary of Butler.

February 26, 1867, Butler County was given the form now shown on the map.

Butler is essentially a prairie county, having, however, considerable land of a slightly rolling character. Bottom land has fifteen and upland eighty-five per cent of its surface. Forest occupies five per cent and prairie ninety five. The principal streams are the Whitewater, Walnut and Little Walnut. The Whitewater traverses the county from north to south. The Walnut rising in the northeast corner of the county, joins the Whitewater at Augusta, and the Little Walnut, flowing southwest from near Rosalia, at Douglass. Other tributaries of the Whitewater are Hickory, Turkey, Muddy, Rock Creek, Indianola, West Branch, Four Mile and Eight Mile Creek. The bottoms along these water courses average a mile and one-quarter. Upon them are found walnut, oak, hickory, hackberry, sycamore, elm and minor varieties of timber. Limestone of excellent quality is found in all parts of the county, and in the extreme northwest, a bed of sandstone. At other points are small quantities of fire clay and gypsum.

Coal is found in many places in thin layers, but has never been mined to any considerable extent or with profit.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

The following record of early settlement has been carefully compiled from the recollection of Martin Vaught, J. D. Connor and D. M. Bronson and from data in their possession. It will be found to differ considerably from the matter found in the report of the State Board of Agriculture into which numerous errors had crept, either through lack of care on the part of the correspondents, or unavoidable typographical mistakes:

The first settlements in the several localities were as follows: Benton Township, April 13, 1878, by J. P. J. Nelson; Bloomington Township, 1867, Samuel Rankin; Bruno Township, May, 1869, V. Smith; Chelsea Township, August, 1857, Bob DeRacken, G. T. Donaldson,

P. G. D. Morton, J. C Lambdin, I. Scott, Martin Vaught, Dr. Lewellen, Charles Jefferson and J. and L. Cole; Clifford Township, 1859, Mr. William Badley; El Dorado Township, May, 1857, William Hildebrande; Fairmount Township, 1869, Holland Ferguson; Hickory Township, 1869, Mr. Myers; Pleasant Township, spring of 1869, Marion Franklin; Plum Grove Township, 1860, Joseph H. Adams; Rock Creek Township, July 1868, D. L. McCabe; Rosalia Township, July, 1869 Philip Karns; Spring Township, April, 1866, Dave, afterward County Commissioner, and H. W. Rev. C. G. Morse, Congregationalist from Emporia, had preached occasionally prior to this, and services were held in the house of J. C. Lambdin; a Presbyterian society was organized in El Dorado township and building commenced in 1872, completed in 1877; Methodist, 1873; Union Township, 1873, Methodist; 1874, Christian. Religious services are held regularly in nearly all the schoolhouses in the county.—First schoolhouses: Augusta, 1869, District No. 13; Bloomington Township, 1872, District No. 5; Bruno Township, by District No. 72, date not given; Chelsea Township, 1860, by District No. 10—first school taught by Miss Sarah Satchel; Clifforp Township, 1871, by District No. 21—first school taught by S. S. Lambdin, P. M., and at El Dorado, in 1860, D. L. McCabe, P. M.

William Hildebrande, who came in May, 1857, to El Dorado Township, was the first settler in Butler County. In June, 1857, Samuel Stewart, of Lawrence organized a colony to settle in Butler County. Following the old California trail until they came to the crossing, the party pitched the ten wall-tents with which they were provided, in a circle, and erected in the centre of the camp the stars and stripes. This was on June 15, 1857. Two days later the colonists planted some corn—the first ever planted in the county. On July 9, 1857, Henry Martin, William Crimble, Jacob Carey, H. Bemis and William Bemis, with their families, settled near El Dorado. There were in this party ten other families, but their names have been lost.

The first celebration in this county of our national holiday took place long before Butler was a county or Kansas a Territory. In July, 1847, Captain J. J. Clark, with his company of Missouri Mounted Volunteers bound for the Mexican war, came along the old California trail and crossing the Walnut about a mile below the site of El Dorado, on the evening of the 3d camped over night. The following day the eagle screamed, and salutes were fired, and due honors paid to the warriors of an older day.

Ten years later on July 4, 1857, came the second celebration on Butler County land. This was held near Conners, in El Dorado, by the newly arrived settlers. No houses had been put up for the immigrants, and their wagons stood in a circle to serve as a fort in case of Indian attack. Money was scarce in that camp, and had it been as plentiful as sea sands it could have purchased nothing; so the men started out to find in Nature's store-house the materials for a feast. In the Walnut William Crimble caught a large buffalo fish, Samuel Stewart shot a wild turkey and another of the party brought in a deer. While these supplies were being prepared numerous speeches served to show the patriotism of the various members, and Judge Wakefield, of Lawrence, delivered an address. There is no time like the first in anything, and though often a celebration of later days has been memorable, and its echoes have rung in Memory's ears for many a day, there can be none to efface in the hearts of those who heard them the resonant sounds of a quarter-century ago.

One of the earliest items in Butler County's history is the apportionment of the State into judicial districts. The counties of Butler, Hunter, Greenwood, Madison, Weller, Coffey, Anderson and Allen constituted the Thirteenth District, which was entitled to one member. In August, 1857, Samuel L. Adair was elected to the Senate and C. Columbia to the House. In October, 1857, Madison and Butler counties polled sixty-nine Free-State and seven Democratic votes. At the election under the Lecompton constitution December 21, 1857, there were no returns from Butler County. On March 9 1858, Samuel Stewart, who built the first house in the county, and was later killed in the Indian Territory, was elected a delegate to the Minneola convention. On August 2, 1858 an election was held, at the old El Dorado town site on the Lecompton Constitution, and the entire vote (twenty-three) polled was cast against that infamous platform. On April 15, 1859, the county cast fifteen votes for the Wyandotte constitution and two against it. On November 8, 1859, the county cast one vote for Johnson, Democrat, and forty-seven for Parrot, Republican, candidates for Congress. J. C. Lambdin was elected a member of the Territorial Council at the same time.

A Primitive Election.—An election in Butler was held in May, 1858, on the adoption of the Free State Constitution—the "Topeka" constitution. It was held right north of Chelsea under some spreading oaks that still stand at the north end of what is now the lane between J. E. Buchanan's and Joseph McDaniel's farms. No box could be found out of which a ballot box could be made, but after hunting around awhile Mrs. Woodruff handed out a big coffee mill—one of the kind that has a drawer, which was used and answered the purpose. The drawer was pulled out, a ballot dropped in and then shoved up again. There were about a hundred votes cast.

When the first settlement was made in Butler County, the lands south of the Fifth Standard parallel, which runs at the north line of the present city of El Dorado, were largely Indian property. Just south of this line lay what was known as the four-mile strip extending completely across the county from east to west, and open to entry and pre-emption. Next south lay the twenty-mile strip, the property of the Osage tribe. This, at the time of earliest settlement, Indian land, was ceded to the Government by the Little Osages on September 29, 1863, and was held as trust land. Next south lay the diminished Osage Reserve which remained the property of the Indians until September 18, 1870, when it passed into the hands of the Government and was opened for settlement. It was locally known from its width as the "thirty-mile strip."

The first invasion of the grasshoppers took place in the fall of 1860, but, as is quaintly said by an old timer, the settlers had nothing to lose and no damage was done. In March, 1861, the eggs deposited the preceding year hatched out and considerable loss was suffered, though this was very slight compared with the visitations of a later time.

At the breaking out of the war of 1861, a company was raised near Chelsea, for home defence; this company was under P. G. D. Morton. Its only service was shortly after its organization and consisted of the capture of a wagon train proceeding, in violation of a recent order, to the Indian Territory. The entire outfit was by the exertions of Capt. Morton safely forwarded to Leavenworth and delivered to its owners from whom the persons found in charge had attempted to steal it. During the winter of 1861–2 this company built and occupied a fort on what is now John Teter's farm about two miles northeast of El Dorado. In the spring of 1862 the company broke up, the majority of its members joining the United States forces mustered in at Leavenworth.

The pioneer of religion in this as in many other counties was Father Stanberry of the Methodist Episcopal Church. At various times in the very early days of the county this zealous old man visited different points, stopping in the rude cabins of the settlers and in his quaint fashion expounding the untiring faith which animated him. The old settlers to this day tell stories of his trips on a weatherbeaten pony that fairly matched the grizzled locks and antiquated appearance of its master. Yet none ever doubted his simple truth or failed to yield him the love and reverence that was his due. The next missionary was Elder Rice, who for some time traveled the indefinite southwestern circuit and held the first quarterly meeting in the county on the east bank of the Walnut, at a spot now part of the farm of Henry Small.

Miss Minnie Post and Miss Maggie Vaught, now Mrs. H. O. Chittenden, of El Dorado, established the first Sunday school in Butler County, at Chelsea, in the summer of 1859. They kept it up until the summer of 1860, when many settlers left on account of the severe drouth and caused a suspension of the school. In this year a Mr. Matice, of Lawrence, a Sunday school agent, attempted to revive the school but failed.

The herd law was passed in April, 1871, by a vote of 569 to 504, and has ever since been in force. Though no systematic effort has ever been made for its repeal, public opinion is still divided upon the question of its advisability, one party claiming that it retards hedge planting and fencing, and the other that it enchances agricultural interests and the value of farm property.

On June 22, 1871, a tornado struck the town of El Dorado, inflicting great damage. The wind was accompanied by hail and rain, which seemed to augment the intense violence of the air and materially aid the work of destruction. Houses were blown down or twisted off their foundations, windows dashed in, trees overturned and crops ruined. In the city the principal losers were: Hazlett & Dick, $1,500; McClaren & Jackson, $2,000; Gardner & Gilmore, $2,500, and W. H. Redden, $2,000. These amounts were swelled by a myriad of smaller ones so that the total loss was not less than $150,000. This looked like a crushing blow, but the hardy citizens began immediately to rebuild, and before another year all traces of the event were obliterated and business once more moving forward with a steady swing.

Horse Thieves and the Vigilantes.—As the tide of civilization rolls in over the level prairies of the new West it carries on its further line a fretted surf of loose characters—men cast up from the deeper sea of close settlement and driven upon an unsettled shore only to be hurled still further by each successive onflow. Many such were within the border of Butler County during the period from its first settlement until 1870. For a long time a party of this sort had been operating about Douglass and between the secret assistance of unsuspected parties and the proximity of the Indian Territory had escaped capture. Matters had, however, reached an unbearable pitch, and on the night November 10, 1870, a decisive step was taken by the settlers.

On the morning of November 10, 1870, the citizens of Douglass found near the house of George Booth four dead bodies, with the warning notice "Shot for horse thieves." It is doubtful if this was much of a surprise to many of the citizens, although the lynching caused a great commotion. The dead men were not without a witness, Mrs. Booth having seen all that passed. Her version of the affair is that while James Smith, Lewis and George Booth and Jack Corbin, a Government scout, were seated in the room a party of men with leveled pistols stepped in and covered the party. George Booth attempted to escape by dashing from the house, but was shot down near by. Lewis Booth was taken out and shot, as was James Smith, and Corbin was taken to a tree and hung. On December 1, William Quimby, a prominent merchant, Dr. Morris and his son and "Mike" Dray were taken quietly from town by the vigilantes and hung. This effectually broke up the gang which had so long been the source of loss to the honest citizens and the business was never resumed in the county.

The Agricultural Society.—The Butler County Horticultural and Agricultural Society which organized in March 1872, is still in a flourishing condition. Large grounds have been purchased in the west part of the city and a fine building erected for the display of all articles of farm and dairy production. Around the high walls which enclose the grounds are suitable stalls for the display of all varieties of stock.

RAILROADS.

The railway history of any county on the broad surface of Kansas is a record of trials and tribulations, of hard struggles to secure the co-operation of settlers in necessary expenditures, of retreat from the field of the companies for which so much had been done, of final success and the arrival of the iron bands which unite the world. The first railway to solicit the aid of this county was the Kansas-Nebraska, which proposed to build across the county in consideration of the subscription of $150,000 to the stock of the railway company and the issuing of an equal amount of the bonds of the county. This proposition was carried by a vote of 1,187 to 811, but the panic of 1873 coming on, the building of the road was deferred and finally abandoned. On May 18, 1872, the question of voting bonds to the amount of $150,000 to the Fort Scott, Humboldt & Western Railway was put to vote and decided in the negative by a vote of 1,037 to 1,240. The next proposal was voted upon July 13, 1872, and lost by a vote of 189 to 1,206. This was for taking stock in the road voluminously spread on the records as the Eureka, Douglass & Santa Fe, Walnut Valley, Kansas Nebraska Railway. At the same time the Ft. Scott, Humboldt & Western Kansas Railway was treated to a dose of cold water—366 votes being cast in its favor and 1,058 against its proposition. In April, 1876, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company proposed to build a road from Cedar Point on the main line down the Walnut Valley to El Dorado and ultimately to and beyond the south line of the county. The proposal of the company was for a cash bonus of $3,000 per mile, no exchange of bonds and stock being asked. While this proposition was being agitated, the citizens of Florence were working hard to have their town made the initial point. It soon became evident that a road would be built to El Dorado from the main line under some conditions, and in February, 1877, bonds aggregating $99 500 were voted to the El Dorado & Walnut Valley Road. Work was at once begun and the track completed to El Dorado at 6:27 P. M. on July 31, 1877. On September 4, an excursion train was run from Topeka and the citizens of El Dorado given a free trip to Florence and return. A grand celebration was held in the grove. Gov. Anthony was present and made a brief speech which was followed by many others, after which the joy of the crowd overflowed in a general jubilee that will be long remembered.

About this time the Kansas City, Burlington & Southwestern Railway and telegraph line made overtures for aid to the amount of not over $4,000 per mile in running an east and west road. This proposition was favorably considered by a vote of 322 to 128 in the townships interested, but the matter stopped there and the road was never built.

On February 21, 1880, the townships of Douglass and Walnut voted aid to the St. Louis, Wichita & Western Railway, but the road was never built.

We now come to the second successful railway project which has affected Butler's interests. As early as 1879, the St. Louis, Ft. Scott & Wichita Railway began the work which finally led to the completion of an east and west road, although bonds were not voted until more than a year later. The road passes through two townships east of El Dorado City, Rosalia and Prospect. From these it receives $10,000 and $18,000 in bonds respectively. El Dorado Township gives $25,000, Towanda $13,500 and Benton $11,000. The payment of the bonds in the two last named townships depends upon the completion of the road to the west line of the county by September 1, 1883. The bonds of the first three are already secured by the completion of the road to El Dorado.

OFFICIAL ROSTER AND COUNTY AFFAIRS.

On April 30, 1859, the Board of County Supervisors met at the house of G. T. Donaldson "for the purpose of establishing the offices of the county officers." The board, then consisting of P. G. Barrett, chairman, and G. T. Donaldson and I. S. White, after ruling that their annual meeting should be held at Chelsea Hall, decided that for the present the county officers should hold their offices at their residences. The only exception to this was the "Clerk of Probate," who was commanded to hold office at I. C. Lambdin's until further notice. At the next meeting, June 13, 1859, P. G. D. Morton was appointed County Auditor, the equivalent of county clerk. No record of a successor to Mr. Morton is found until the election of 1863, when M. Vaught was selected. Since that time county clerks have been elected as follows: A. J. Donahoo, 1865; A. H. Morehead (appointed August, 1867, and elected at November election of the same year); H. D. Kellogg (appointed April 6, 1868, and elected 1869); A. W. Stearns, 1870; J. Blivins, 1871; Vincent Brown, 1873-75-77; C. P. Strong, 1879—81.

The first County Treasurer was C. S. Lambdin, appointed September 19, 1859. He was followed by T. W. Satchel, 1863; H. Martin, 1865; (Mr. Martin was appointed in September, 1867, to serve from January 1, to July 1, 1868 but was re-elected in November, 1867); A. Ellis, 1869-71; Joseph Williams, 1873; E. B. Brainard, 1875-77; M. Bradley, 1879-81.

The first Probate Judge was J. C. Lambdin. He was followed by C. S. Lambdin; H. Martin, 1863; S. T. Howell, 1865; W. H. Thomas, 1866; Wm. H. Harrison, 1868; H. T. Sumner, 1870; J. C. Taylor, 1871; S. E. Black, 1871; W. S. Taylor, 1872; S. E. Black, 1874 76-78; E. D. Stratford, 1880-82.

The first Clerk of the District Court was Emmil. He was followed by W. W. Slayton, 1866; A. Morehead, 1867; A. L. Petrie, 1868; J. E. Buchanan (appointed), 1869; H. D. Kelley, 1869; I. C. Adams, 1870; H. M. Winger, 1871; M. D. Ellis, 1872; C. N. James, 1874—76-78-80; N. P. Mooney, 1882.

The first Register of Deeds was John R. Lambdin. He was followed by M. Vaught, 1863; A. H. Morehead, 1867; D. M. Bronson (appointed April 6) 1869; W. A. Sallee, 1870; D. L. Knowles, 1871-73-75; J. D. Porter, 1877; E. E. Harvey, 1879-81.

The records fail to show the election of a sheriff prior to 1863, when J. T. Goodall was elected. Dr. Lewellen was, however, in office in 1859. Mr. Goodall was followed by W. D. Shaw, 1865; James Thomas, 1867; A. A. Jackson, 1869; J. E. Anderson, 1871-73-75; F. M. Anderson, 1877; E. E. Harvey, 1879; W. H. Douglas, 1881.

In 1864 M. Vaught was appointed County Superintendent. He was followed by D. L. McCabe, 1866; H. D. Kellogg (appointed January 1, 1868); J. E. Buchanan, 1870; S. S. Robbards, 1872; John Blivins, 1874; Alvah Sheldon, 1876-78; J. W. Shively, 1880-82.

Representatives from this county, at first one, but now two districts, have been: G. T. Donaldson, 1863; D. L. McCabe, 1865; S. N. Wood, 1866; G. T. Donaldson, 1867; T. R. Wilson, 1868; H. Small, 1869; T. H. Baker, 1870 (This election was also contested, and L. S. Friend, who had been declared elected, lost the seat); I. Mooney, 1871; T. H. Baker, 1872; H. D. Hill, 1873; J. L. Ferguson, 1874-75; M. A. Palmer and H. W. Beck, 1876; U. A. Albin and D. M. Bronson, 1878; G. A. Sears and H. D. Bill, 1880; F. W. Rash and J. H. Fullenwelder, 1882.

On August 20, 1859, the first poll tax in the county was levied on all between the ages of twenty-one and forty-five. March 21, 1860, an election precinct to be known as Toronto was created at the house of Doctor Lewellen. Four years later (March 26, 1864) two additional voting precincts were created: El Dorado and Towanda. The first county order had been issued on January 19th of this year, and read as follows: "State of Kansas, Butler Co., s.s., Jan. 19, 1864. To the Treasurer of Butler Co. Pay Jordan Mabe twenty dollars for services assessing said county.

H. G. Bronson, Chairman."

This order was endorsed by M. Vaught, county clerk, with the magic word "Paid."

Every county in the State, probably, has had its county seat fight, and we need do little more than present the records of the various elections in which the several struggles culminated. On May 21, 1864, the first election was held and El Dorado selected as the county seat (this was the old town), but on July 4 of that year, we learn from the record of the County Commissioners, that no building suitable for county offices had been put up on the town site, and the board resolved not to move there until suitable provision was made. In August, 1867, the question of removal came up again, Whitewater Junction having two votes; County Center, six; the southwest quarter of Section 4, and the northwest quarter of Section 9, Town 25, Range 6, 29, and El Dorado 50. The third election occurred on May 10, 1870, and gave Chelsea 258 and El Dorado 1,524 votes. This was followed in April, 1871, by the contest between Augusta and El Dorado, and the success of the latter by a count of 743 to 712. This settled the question, which has never since been agitated.

As will be seen, the County Commissioners and other officers were for some time without a proper place for transacting business. For some time Dunlevy's building was used, and most of the officers had their offices in their houses, or after a fashion, under their hats. In July, 1870, a strong effort was made to secure the issue of $25,000 in bonds, the proceeds to be used for county buildings. This proposal met with hearty opposition, and was voted down 239 to 550. Nothing daunted, the settlers went to work on another scheme, and on July 19, 1870, the land now occupied by the court house was deeded to the county, in consideration of $1, by Henry and C. C. Martin. The contract for a court house was then let to I. N. Branson for $3,750, and work began at once. In April, 1871, the building was completed and occupied. Although well finished and a good building, the court house was not large enough to accommodate all the officers, and after doing the best that could be done with it, it was decided in July, 1875, to make extensive additions and improvements. All that part of the building west of the hall way was then constructed at a cost of $8,000, making with previous expenditures and the jail on the southwest corner a total cost of $15,000. The building was completed in March, 1876. Its present dimensions are 52x54 feet; its height, two stories.

SCHOOL AND OTHER STATISTICS.

The first school taught in this county was in charge of Miss Sarah Satchel. It was located at Chelsea, the oldest settlement in the county, and was opened in 1860. At this time the school district embraced this county and Cowley, as well as parts of Chase and Greenwood counties. The second school was taught in 1863 in Towanda in a log building, erected by the settlers. A school was also started in El Dorado Township at an early day, a subscription being raised by the citizens, and the school taught by Miss Jane Wentworth. The difficult office of county superintendent of public instruction was also filled, and the machinery of education progressed. The schoolhouses were many of them rough, and, if report speaks truly, some of the teachers were of the same sort. Yet the work was pretty honestly done, and the rising generation compares favorably with that of any other county. Since 1879 very full reports have been made, from which the following summary is drawn: School districts in 1879, 125; in 1880, 130; in 1881, 138; in 1882, 143. School population between the ages of five and twenty-one: In 1879, 6,056; in 1880, 6,397; in 1881, 6,546; in 1882, 6,861. Enrollment: In 1879, 4,590; in 1880, 4,356; in 1881, 5,228; in 1882, 5,303. Average attendance: In 1879, 2,885; in 1880, 2,882; in 1881, 3,294; in 1882, 3,296. Teachers employed: In 1879, 136; in 1880, 176; in 1881, 179; in 1882, 154. Total school expenditures: In 1879, $34,962.76; in 1880, $40,060.08; in 1881, $43,469.22½; in 1882, $53,328.09.

Butler County has more manufacturies of raw material into finished product than any county in Southern Central Kansas. A brief recapitulation of the principal industries gathered from the returns made to the County Clerk is as follows: J. W. Smith, Leon, horse-power sorghum-mill valued at $300; Lytle & Sons, Towanda, water-power flouring-mill, $1,300; H. J. & J. W. Ground, Augusta, steam flouring-mill, $19 000, and water-power flouring-mill, $8,000; J. C. Haines, Augusta, steam corn-mill, $4,000; A. Palmer, Augusta, steam saw-mill, $1,200; John W. Dunn, Douglas, water-power flouring-mill, $10 000; Wise & Kirk, Douglass, steam flouring-mill, $20 000; J. T. Oldham, El Dorado, steam furniture-factory, $1,000; Burdett & Weeks, El Dorado, water and steam-power flouring-mill, $20,000; L. Hunting, El Dorado, brickyard, horse-power, $1,000; L. D. Godfrey, Leon, water-power flouring-mill, $1,500. Besides these are some small industries with a capital of from $500 to $700 not employing any save hand power.

The following table will serve to show the acreage of the principal crops of the county, and how general opinion of their adaptability has changed in the past ten years:

EL DORADO.

El Dorado, the county seat and largest city of Butler County, is located on the Walnut River about fifteen miles above its confluence with the Whitewater. The 140 acre tract which comprised the original town site was entered on March 23, 1868, by B. Frank Gordy, and filed for record in the succeeding month. Shortly after entering his claim, Gordy sold a fifth interest each to Henry Martin, Samuel Langdon and Byron O. Carr, and with them formed the El Dorado town company. Town lots were laid out and sold to all who would improve them, at the rate of ten dollars a lot. The location of the town near the crossing of the old California trail on the Walnut, and its other natural advantages of position, did much to aid it at this critical time, when it needed but a trifle to kill the embryo city. Houses of a very modest description sprang up rapidly, and the town began soon to present a semblance of substantiality. There had been some houses on the town site prior to the entrance of the Gordy claim. As early as 1867 a log house was built in the east part of town, and the same summer E. L. Lower put up a cabin where Dr. A. White's residence now stands. The latter of these buildings has passed away, but the former still stands just west of the livery stable on East Central avenue. The third building on the town site was a frame store erected by Henry Martin. Just prior to the erection of this store, Elias Main put up a saw mill on the Walnut near the present lower bridge. The year 1868 brought many new industries to the town. In the spring D. M. Bronson opened a land office. Dr. Kellogg divided his time between this office and the practice of his profession. A wagon shop was put up by a Mr. Handley, a blacksmith shop by Mat. Strickland and a harness shop by Mr. Gearhart. Mrs. Long opened a millinery store, and some minor branches of business were carried on. This year was also signalized by the opening of the first regular saloon. This institution, after being some time a sore spot in the community, was closed by the suit of Mrs. Thomas Tool for damages to her husband and the ensuing litigation. To counteract the influence of the saloon element thus early arrayed against the prohibition forces, the temperance people organized a lodge of the Sons and Daughters of Temperance. This order flourished for some time, but finally died out and its records have been lost. The year closed upon the town in a flattering state of growth, and bidding fair to become a large central trading point.

Thus far the reputation of El Dorado had spread little beyond its immediately associated towns in the northeast—the places where it touched the line of older settlement, and felt, though distantly, the pulsations of the world's great heart. With 1869 came the publication of a paper of its own, the Emigrant's Guide, gotten up by Bronson & Sallee, who had entered extensively into real estate dealings, and printed by Jacob Stotler, of the Emporia News. The Guide was what would now be called a "rustler," and crowed for Butler County and El Dorado after a very lusty fashion. This year saw the first social gathering of the people in the new settlement, and the first disaster, the drowning of the Johnson family in the June flood in the Walnut. With 1870 came a rush of settlers and a flood of events which deserve more specific description.

With the rush of 1870 came the demand for more room within the town limits, and the specially suave and ready respond to the demand by real estate men. Lower's addition of eighty acres, now forming all of the town north of Central Avenue, was laid out in this year, as were the blocks [illegible]nd belonging to Finley & Gordon, on Main street, and that of Wilson on the west. These, together, made a little less than 320 acres.

The form of the name of the capital city of Butler County is even now a vexed question. When the Walnut Valley Times made [illegible] first appearance, its usually well posted editor adopted the spelling of "[illegible]o." This came to be in general use, and when the change in management of the paper was made, and "El Dorado" printed as the name of the city, considerable discussion was evoked. Th: following letter from Captain J. Cracklin, of Lawrence, one of the party who started the town, may fairly be said to settle the matter.

LAWRENCE, KAN., Dec. 11, 1882.

"DEAR SIR:—In reply to yours of the 7th inst., I would say the name El Dorado is two Spanish words, and signifies 'The golden land.' The beautiful appearance of the country upon our arrival at the Walnut, suggested the name, and I exclaimed, 'El Dorado,' and when the town site was selected, the name was unanimously adopted. I proposed the name and Mr. Thomas Cordis seconded it.

Yours very truly, J. CRACKLIN."

William Hildebrand is supposed to have been the first settler near El Dorado, having taken a claim near where J. D. Conner's farm now lies. In 1859, his place which had become a sort of headquarters for horse thieves, was raided, and Hildebrand after joining the order of the flagellants or anglice, getting a sound thrashing at the hands of the vigilantes, was given twenty-four hours to effect his escape from the county, and disappeared forever from El Dorado's horizon. In 1859 occurred the first wedding in El Dorado, as well as in the county, the parties united being Miss Augusta Stewart and a Mr. Graham. Shortly after the wedding, the groom received serious injuries from the discharge of an overloaded gun and died. The first child born in El Dorado, was Mattie, daughter of Mr. P. R. Wilson. The first death, that of Mrs. H. D. Kellogg.

El Dorado postoffice, as originally located, stood a mile and one-half south of the present town. The mails were, however, handled at the residence of Henry Martin on the present town site, and the Postmaster, Daniel Stine, lived at Augusta. There was a little frame building at the site of El Dorado proper, but in 1867, when the county lines had been moved to their present southern limit, this had been stripped and stood alone and untenanted. At this juncture D. M. Bronson, who had been appointed County Attorney, proposed to Connor, Representative from this district, to refit the building and employ it as county seat headquarters. After various conferences, in which Connor refused to do anything, Bronson left this part of the country and went to a point below Augusta. On his return the present El Dorado had been located and made the county seat. Had Connor responded to Bronson's wishes, the present site of El Dorado might now be a fine farm.

A postoffice had been opened across the Walnut, opposite the present city, for four or five years before old El Dorado was surveyed, and D. L. McCabe had been Postmaster. Daniel Stine, of Augusta, was, as has already been stated, Postmaster in the old town, though never performing the duties of the office. The officials in the present city have been: Henry Martin, H. D. Kellogg, Mrs. Long, Frank Frazier and Alvah Sheldon. The office has for some years been a presidential one.

The first Fourth of July celebration is thus described by Mrs. D. M. Bronson: "Our first Fourth of July celebration occurred in 1868, which eclipsed anything I had ever seen for pure, unadulterated patriotism and practically illustrated freedom. The grove near Dr. Gordon's was selected for the purpose. The preparations were elaborate, seats were improvised, a speaker's stand erected, an old army flag was resurrected out of some dark corner and suspended in graceful folds from the limb of a tree just over the head of the speaker, which was both inspiring and effective. A public dinner was the order of the day. The men reconnoitered around to secure the financial requisite. The women were occupied preparing the 'grub.' The day arrived, and 'all went merry as a marriage bell.' The sun shone brightly, the birds sang sweetly, and all nature seemed in unison with our hearts. The Marshal of the day was Mr. Elisha Main. The exercises were introduced by singing the 'Star Spangled Banner,' which was executed with spirit; what was lacking in time was supplied in sound. Father Stansberry offered a prayer; the Declaration of Independence was read by W. T. Gallagher; orations were then delivered by D. M. Bronson and W. T. Gallagher, which were both eloquent and patriotic, and so vivid in portrayal that we could almost see the noble bird in his aerial gyrations, and hear the footfall of the Pilgrim Father on the barren Plymouth Rock. The Declaration, our glorious Magna Charta, was literally worn out, what there was remaining of it would hardly make a gun wad. After the exercises closed the table was prepared, looking inviting enough to please the most fastidious epicure. But here came the 'tug of war.' There were about ten bachelors to one woman in the county. All hungry, lean and lank, they made one grand forward march for the table. In about five minutes that table was bare. One lady approaching me with a countenance indicative of sorrow, said: 'Have you seen anything of my fruit cake?—the first one I have seen or made since I left old England's shores.' I told her I supposed it had gone to hunt up my dried apple pies. I did come near on this occasion being converted to the doctrine of total depravity. The day's exercises closed by a grand ball over Henry Martin's store, located where Mr. Denny's store now stands. This was our first 'dress ball.'"

The first hotel opened in the new town was a rough frame, erected in 1869, and occupied by Thomas Bros. This very modest hostelry was later made the rear portion of the El Dorado House of S. Langdon. For the past four years the building has been used as a flour and provision house, and the walls, which have resounded to the baying of hunting dogs or the tales of Indian scares, or later, to the wassail and rude mirth of pre-prohibition times, are covered with dust, and for some time have echoed no sounds save the tramp of footsteps and the scurry of the rats.

El Dorado has been fortunate in its exemption from disastrous fires, the only one of any great importance occurring in December, 1880, and destroying the Walnut Valley Elevator. This structure was built in 1878, at a cost of $10,000, and had a capacity of 40,000 bushels. It was not only an elevator, but also a flouring mill. At the time of its destruction it was nearly full of wheat. The origin of the fire was never precisely ascertained, but was thought to be incendiary.

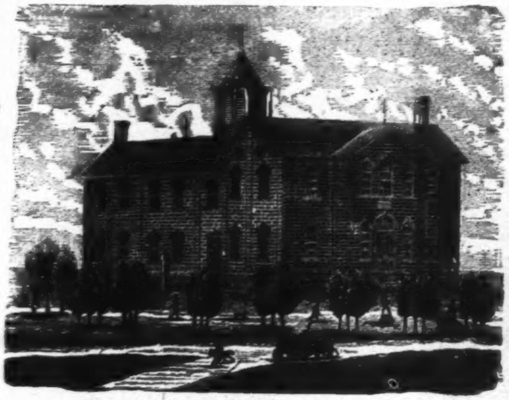
The city now has a population of fully 2,000, and is growing rapidly. Some idea of its gain in the past year can be taken from a statement of the buildings erected during 1882. This list, which is too long for publication, foots up $59,100. This sum is distributed among a hundred buildings, giving an average cost of $591. Many included in the list were small buildings, offices and the like, but none ran in price above $4,000, and but sixteen reached $1,000, the majority being cozy residences at or near the outskirts of the city.

CITY GOVERNMENT.

El Dorado was laid out and a form of town establishment inaugurated in 1868, but no practical organization was effected until Sept. 12, 1871, when it was organized under the laws applying to cities of the third class. J. C. Lambdin, who had been chairman of the board of trustees, became Mayor pro tem until the election of Henry Falls. The list of principal officials of the city since that time has been as follows: Mayors, H. Falls, 1872; J. C. Lambdin, 1873; J. B. Mitchell, 1874; Wm. J. Cameron, 1875; J. A. McKenzie, 1876-77-78; A. Bassett, 1879; J. A. McKenzie, 1880; A. Bassett, 1881; A. White, 1882. Mr. White died in office in October 1882, and G. M. Weeks became acting Mayor for the unexpired term. D. M. Bronson, the first City Clerk, was followed by John P. Campbell, 1872; W. O. Redden, 1873-74-75; Ed. J. Thomas, 1876; Lafayette Knowles, 1877; T. H. Lemon, 1878; L. Leland, Jr., 1879; C. B. Daughters, 1880-81; E. E. Carr, 1882.

SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.

The first schoolhouse in El Dorado was a log cabin built by a subscription of the settlers. Here Miss Jane Wentworth taught a class of about fifteen. In 1869-70, the old stone house still standing near the park, was erected at a cost of $2,000, and regular terms of school begun. E. Cowles was principal in 1869; T. R. Wilson, 1870; John Snyder, 1871; Charles Moore, 1872; J. C. Elliott, 1873; E. C. Brooks, 1874-75; Z. M. Riley, 1876; George Edwards, 1877; E. W. Hulse, 1878-79-80-81. The present force consists of Alfred McCaskey, Mrs. Belle Howard, Miss Ida Brown, Mrs. C. B. Daughters, Miss Cora C. Battin, Miss May Schmucker and Mrs. J. Richardson. The old stone schoolhouse although a large structure for that early day in the city's history soon proved inadequate, and on February 22, 1872, the corner stone of the present building was laid. The fine stone so abundant in this part of the country was used and the succeeding fall the building was completed at a cost of $8,000. It soon became evident that the new building was not large enough and its youthful population overflowed into the old school. In 1879 a large addition was constructed at a cost of $4,000. This stayed the tide a little, but in 1882 it again became necessary to have recourse to the old building. What shall be the next step is a knotty problem now vexing the city fathers and awaiting the city's becoming one of the second class and establishing ward schools. The present school population is nearly six hundred.



PUBLIC SCHOOL, EL DORADO.

The Baptist Church was organized in 1869 by Rev. James Saxby, who supplied it for some time. During 1870 the church was under the ministrations of Rev. T. G. Grove. The church then went down and held no services until 1875, when Rev. E. W. Melton was made pastor. In 1877 the pulpit again became vacant and so remained until 1879, when Rev. J. D. P. Hungate accepted a call. His ministry lasted until 1881, when Rev. C. H. Remington, the present pastor, took charge of the church. A church building with a seating capacity of 250 was erected in 1880 at a cost of $2,500. A Sabbath school started in 1879 has now an average attendance of 75 and is in charge of John Foutch.

The Presbyterian Church was organized in 1870 by Rev. James Gordon, who became its stated supply for about one year. The pulpit was then filled by Rev. W. M. Stryker. The pastorate then remained vacant for about three years. In 1877 W. M. Pocock was called to the vacant chair, which he occupied about three years, giving place to Rev. S. McAnderson, the present pastor. A church building was begun in 1873 but when the walls were up the work was stopped until 1877, when the house was completed; the whole costing $3,500. A parsonage was built in 1878 at a cost of $500. The church now has a membership of eighty. A Sabbath school started in 1877 has now an average attendance of 75, and is in charge of F. P. Gillespie.

The Methodist Church was organized in 1870 by Rev. S. F. C. Garrison who supplied it for two or three months and was succeeded by Rev. D. L. Knowles; to this clergyman succeeded Revs. S. L. Roberds, A. Hartman, J. W. Fox, T. C. Hunt, W. Oakly, Paul F. Davis, and Rev. J. T. Burris, the present pastor, who was installed in the spring of 1882. A church building, erected in 1873 at a cost of $1,500, was enlarged in 1879 at a cost of $8,000, and is now one of the most commodious in the city. A parsonage was built in 1875. A Sabbath school, established in 1873, is in a flourishing condition, has an average attendance of 130, and is in charge of M. Fullenwider.

The Christian Church was organized by Rev. E. E. Harvey in February, 1873. Under his leadership it continued to grow for four years. In 1877 E. L. Craig accepted the pastorate. He was followed by Rev. J. F. Floyd who remained until 1882, when Rev. J. J. Henry was installed. A church building was completed in 1875 at a cost of $3,400, most of the money being furnished by Eastern friends, and the labor utilized to aid the needy of the town. It has a seating capacity of 250. The society now numbers 165. A Sabbath school, established in 1875, has now an average attendance of 70, and is in care of J. W. Shively.

The United Brethren Church began to hold meetings at the Satchel schoolhouse in 1876, under Rev. George Gay. After a little time, however, it became dormant, and so remained until 1878, when services were resumed. In 1881 Pastor Guyer commenced his labors, holding services in El Dorado, and in 1882 a church building valued at $1,000 was erected. The society now numbers 80. A Sabbath school, started in 1881, is in a flourishing condition under the superintendence of William Myers.

Walnut Valley Times.—The first number of the Times bears date March 4, 1870, and files the names of Murdock & Danford as publishers. It was a seven column folio of regulation size, and bore at the head of its first column the market quotation "Gold dull at $1.20½. On June 1, 1870 the special partnership between Murdock & Danford was dissolved and T. B. Murdock became sole owner, continuing in this position until March 1, 1881, when Alvah Sheldon, the present proprietor, purchased the paper. On September 30, 1870, the paper appeared enlarged to eight columns. For many years the types responded to the pressure of a Washington hand press, with a brawny arm at the lever, but in January, 1879, a Potter power press was purchased. The paper now has a circulation of 1,320, a proof that its claims as the leading paper of the county, are not without foundation. The paper has always been published within twenty feet of its present location, on the corner of Main Street and Central Avenue. This brief outline would convey no fitting idea of this paper without a word of the admirable spirit exhibited by its late editor, T. B. Murdock. Intensely alive to the great possibilities of his county he prepared for the first number of the Times a condensed account of its resources and expectations. This matter appeared on the fourth page week after week and month after month, until it had been read by many thousands, to whom previously this region was terra incognito. Not content with this he introduced carefully prepared correspondence, from all over the county, giving the special points of each locality and what was being done to extend settlement. This constant ringing of the changes brought on a settlement rarely paralleled in counties so situated, and seems to justify the statement of the present able editor of the Times: 'The county is what Murdock made it."

El Dorado Press.—This paper was started on March 1, 1877 by J. M. Satterthwaite, who still ownes and runs it. It is a six column quarto sheet, of Republican proclivities, and has a circulation of 800 copies weekly. It is published on Thursdays.

The Eagle started in the spring of 1882, on the material of the Democrat, which had been purchased by a stock company. T. P. Fulton, who had edited the Democrat, became local editor of the new paper and the political work was done by members of the company. On June 1, E. A. Davis, the present editor, took charge of the office. The paper is a six column folio entirely home printed and has a circulation of 900. It advocates Greenback views and has its largest circulation among the farming community. It is published Thursdays.

The Butler County Democrat was established in July, 1880, by T. P. Fulton, and continued under the same management until sold to the company which started the Eagle. When Mr. Fulton severed his connection with the Eagle a stock company was formed and the Democrat revived with Fulton Bros. as publishers. The paper is an eight column folio and has a circulation of 800. It appears on Thursday of each week.

BANKS, ETC.

Exchange Bank.—A private banking house was opened by Neal Wilkie and S. L. Shotwell, on the northeast corner of Main Street and Central Avenue. Here a business was conducted until February, 1877, when the new building was completed, and the bank organized under the new laws concerning State banks, and a few years later changed its organization to that of a national bank. Its officers are: A. L. Redden, President; H. H. Gardner, Cashier; W. L. Gibson, Assistant Cashier.

The Bank of El Dorado was opened for business on April 5, 1881, by Edward C. Ellett and N. F. Frazier. As a private banking concern it makes no official statement of resources. It has, however, a capital of $30,000 and a surplus of $16,000. This surplus will continue to increase until 1886, under a limitation act when the bank was established, which allows neither partner to draw from the funds before the expiration of five years. The bank occupies a fine building on Main Street.

The Butler County Bank was organized in January, 1882, under the laws regulating State banks, and opened its doors on February 1. It has a capital of $42,000, and the following officers: John Foutch, President; F. P. Gillespie, Cashier; F. B. Ewing, Vice-president. Business is transacted in a first floor room in Masonic Block.

The El Dorado Mills were built in 1870 by Wheeler & Burdett. Some few years later the firm was changed to Burdett & Weeks and as such now exists. The mill buildings which stand on the east bank of the Walnut near the bridge, have been twice enlarged (1879 and 1881) and are now 38x40 feet and two stories and one-half in height. Power is obtained from the river through the medium of a forty-inch turbine wheel, and when that fails from a steam engine of forty horse-power. The mill is provided with three wheat and one corn buhr-stones and has a capacity of fifty barrels of fine grade flour per day.

The Walnut Valley Mills were built in the spring of 1881 by Baldwin & Nicholson, by whom they were run until May, 1882, when they passed into the hands of M. A. Asmey, who now operates them. The mills have three run of buhrs—two for wheat and one for corn—and a capacity of forty barrels per day. Power is furnished by an engine of twenty-five horse-power. All the wheat required by this mill is furnished by the farmers of the county. Both "new process" and "Chicago xxxx" flours are made.

GEN. A. W. ELLET was born near Bristol, Bucks Co., Pa., October 11, 1820. His father, Charles Ellet, and his mother (who was an Isrial) were natives of Pennsylvania. A. W. received his primary education in Philadelphia. When thirteen years of age he was obliged to leave school on account of his health. In 1836, with an elder brother, he came West, arriving, after a two weeks' journey, at Bunker Hill, Macoupin Co., Ill., where they located, being among the first settlers in that locality. He turned his attention to tilling the soil, and was identified with the agricultural interests of Macoupin County for a quarter of a century. Upon the breaking out of the Rebellion he organized three companies. He was urged by the troops composing each company to accept the captaincy, which he did finally of the third company. The quota for Illinois, which was ten regiments, was at that time filled, and Capt. Ellet, on assuming command, reported to Gov. Gamble, of Missouri, who had his company enrolled in the Ninth Missouri Volunteer Infantry as Company I, which was then recruiting. This regiment was subsequently, by order of the President, designated as the Fifty-ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, the ten companies which composed it being entirely from Illinois. Capt. Ellet served with his original company until after the battle of Pea Ridge, at which time he was ordered to report at Gen. Schofield's headquarters, in St. Louis, "with one hundred men and six officers, none above the grade of First Lieutenant, for secret and dangerous service." Upon his arrival in that city, he was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel, and placed in command of one hundred picked men. The duty assigned him was to assist in operating a ram fleet. His brother, Col. Charles Ellet, Jr., a civil engineer, had been ordered by the Secretary of War to construct a fleet of nine rams, which at this period were under headway at New Albany, Ind. To that point Lieut.-Col. Ellet repaired. Upon his arrival they made an impromptu departure, having the mechanics finish their work on the rams while going down the river. On the 6th of June, 1862, they fought the battle before Memphis, in which they and the gunboats, under command of Com. Davis, completely annihilated the enemy's fleet. In this noted engagement Charles Ellet received a wound, from the effects of which he died, June 20, at Jefferson barracks. He was the only man who received an injury on the ram fleet. When news of his death reached the War Department, the Secretary at once telegraphed Lieut. Col. A. W. Ellet to take command of the fleet. Lieut. Col. Ellet, without waiting for instructions, proceeded down the river, having one object in view—the opening of the Mississippi River to our boats. Upon reaching the mouth of Old River, a few miles above Vicksburg, Lieut. Col. Ellet sent his nephew, Charles Rivers Ellet, and his son, Ed C. Ellet, with three others, across the peninsula, and opened communication with Admiral Farragut, giving to that gallant officer the first intelligence he had yet received of the annihilation of the enemy's fleet opposite Memphis. It was during this period that the rebel ram Arkansas came out of Yazoo River and ran the gauntlet of a hundred guns, passed through the entire Federal fleet almost uninjured, and landed under the Vicksburg batteries. Col. Ellet offered his service to run into the Arkansas with one of his rams, and sink her at her anchorage. This offer was accepted by both Admirals Davis and Farragut, and Col. Ellet proceeded to prepare his vessel for the attack; but before the time for starting had arrived, he received orders from the admirals that the iron-clad gunboat Essex, commanded by Com. Procter, supposed to be the most powerful vessel of the navy, should precede the ram in the attack upon the Arkansas; should run down and grapple with the enemy, haul her from her position into the stream, and fight her broadside to broadside. When the fight began Col. Ellet was to dart out with his ram under full head of steam, run into the Arkansas, and sink her in midriver. Col. Ellet moved out upon the report of the first gun announcing that the engagement was begun; but upon rounding the point above Vicksburg, the Essex was observed proceeding down the river, and the Arkansas was still at her moorings, her position only changed by lengthening her headlines, so that Col. Ellet could only strike her by passing below and coming up stream, thus losing much of the ram's momentum and lessening the violence of the shock. The blow was delivered, however, and the Arkansas was greatly injured, so much so that she could not be properly repaired with the means at command at Vicksburg. For this act of bravery Col. Ellet was promoted to Brigadier General. He next moved on to Vicksburg with the Mississippi ram fleet. Immediately after the capture of that city, in which he took a prominent part, he was ordered to report at the War Department in Washington, where he received a commission to take command of a Mississippi marine brigade and ram fleet. This was composed of a regiment of infantry, a battalion of cavalry and a section of artillery, which was to be carried on large steamers. The base of operations was on the Mississippi south of Memphis. The vessels were so constructed that, upon their touching the shore, the command could be thrown out in line of march in less than five minutes. This fleet did good work up to January, 1864, when, on account of there being no further need of such service, it was discontinued. Gen. Ellet resigned upon hearing of Sherman's capture of Savannah. Gen. Ellet's command was a peculiar one, being organized under special instructions from the War Department to act upon the water. His reports were made direct to the Secretary of War. While an independent commander, he yet received orders from the Admiral of the Navy when acting in concert with him. The principal duty of the brigade and ram fleet was to act against the guerrilla bands of the enemy, who fired upon our vessels in their passage up and down the river. The brigade enjoyed the proud record of having captured more than twice their own number in prisoners. Gen. Ellet resided in Illinois until 1869, when he became a resident of El Dorado, and is largely interested in real estate in Butler County, and city property in El Dorado. In July of that year was issued the first edition of the Democrat. Mr. Fulton is a progressive newspaper man in every sense of the word, and if he is not ahead of the procession, is close behind the band wagon. ALVAH SHELDEN, the present editor and publisher of the Times, is yet a young man, but has had his full share of the incidents of frontier life. Born in Wisconsin, on January 15, 1849, he moved a few years later to near San Antonio, Texas, where his father was engaged in farming. Here for a time all went well, but as the troubles which led to the war of the Rebellion came on, Mr. Sheldon, senior, who was an avowed Free-state man, received many threats of vengeance to be inflicted unless he changed his views or residence. These were regarded as idle words, and Sheldon remained unterrified until one bright morning in 1859, on answering a call at the door he was shot dead—for no cause save fealty to his government. News of this tragedy reached Mr. Vaught, a brother-in-law of the murdered man and an early settler of Butler County, and he started at once for St. Louis intending to take the steamer down the river. Yellow fever had, however, broken out in violent form and the trip was postponed until the following spring, when the trip was made overland across Indian Territory. After leaving the Indian nation, Vaught was the subject of a call from the vigilance committee, but was enabled to pass muster, and securing Mrs. Sheldon and the family, consisting of three boys and three girls, returned to near Chelsea in this county. Thence the subject of this sketch moved with his family to Edgar County, Ill., where he received his education. Eight years later the family were again in Kansas on a farm at the South Fork of the Cottonwood. Here Mr. Sheldon farmed one year, after which he removed to Chelsea, in this county, and continued his labors in support of his mother and sisters until 1873. Then, with the adventurous spirit of boyhood, he made a prospecting trip through Indian Territory, Texas and Arkansas, but finally decided that no place was as good as Butler County. Returning he soon accepted a position in the Exchange Bank of El Dorado. While in this position he was elected County Superintendent of Public Instruction, holding the office four years, during which he was appointed Postmaster. He married, in January, 1877, Miss May Lamb, of Douglass, and has now three children to perpetuate his name. Of his public life, particularly since his purchase of the Times, the county records and the columns of his paper furnish the best criterion, and we need only say that in the constantly increasing duties of his life he has shown that vigor and ability which is so cordially welcomed in this land of manly men and insures its possessor all for which he may rationally seek.

AUGUSTA.

Augusta is located at the junction of the Whitewater and the Walnut, on a level plateau. Its history, or rather that of the land upon which it stands, runs back to an early date in the Territorial days of Kansas. In 1857 a party of explorers from Lawrence camped at this point and made it for some time a rendezvous of their trapping and hunting parties. So much were they pleased with its natural advantages that they laid out a town and called it Augusta. In 1858 a party from Topeka jumped the old town and proceeded to lay out Fontanella, surveying streets and laying out business blocks, many of which were disposed of in Eastern markets. This same year, according to another account the town of Orizonia was laid out at the junction of the rivers. In the spring of 1859 the town was raided by the Indians and passed out of existence. These lands, it must be remembered, were then Indian property and no whites had any rights in the premises. At a later day the Creeks, Cherokees, Seminoles and Delawares, all loyal tribes driven from their reservations by the rebels, were quartered here. Near the close of the war a trading post was established by Hagan & Morrill, who were succeeded by Conner & Dunlap and Daniel Stine, one of the early settlers of the present town. Early in 1868 the treaty with the Osages was made and this part of the county opened for settlement. The same year Shamleffer & James opened a trading post on the site of the present town, having purchased the claim on which the town stands for $40. The old log store was completed in July and C. N. James moved into it. This was the initial step in the building of the present fair city, which was named Augusta in honor of Mrs. James.

Early Settlement.—The James & Shamleffer store stood alone until the spring of 1869, when C. C. Grant opened a harness shop. A blacksmith shop and the residence of C. N. James soon followed and the same summer Hon. Thomas H. Baker located a claim adjoining the townsite and put up a general store. This year saw a considerable growth in the new town; a land office was opened by J. M. Herman and an attorney's shingle tacked up by E. E. Eaton and I. N. Phillips. The first hotel, the Augusta House, was also built this year as was a wagon shop and several minor buildings. Thus far although the town was named and had practical existence, it was unsurveyed and the James claim had not even been entered at the proper land office. Both these duties were attended to in the winter of 1869-70. The latter year a new United States land district was established and the land office opened in June at this point. The town was already spreading as only a well located Western town can and the acquisition of the land office was all that was needed to raise the "boom" to a furor. By the close of 1870 nearly every quarter section within ten miles of the town was taken and Herman & McKitrick had laid out a very substantial addition. The following year saw a second addition to the town. This was, however, more than counterbalanced the following year by the removal of the land office to Wichita. In 1872 the city, it is claimed, received a majority of the votes cast for the county seat, but the election was declared illegal and the vote never canvassed. With the struggle for the county seat the early history of the city may be said to terminate, and we pass to the more minute description of its corporate existence.

The Augusta postoffice was established in 1870, and C. N. James appointed Postmaster. In 1874, Mrs. M. S. Harrington succeeded to the office, which she held until November 2, 1881, when C. H. Kurtz, the present official, received his appointment. The postoffice was first kept in the original log building of James & Shamleffer, next in Brown's block, in a small building of its own in the south part of town, and finally in the front room of the Southern Kansas Gazette. It was made a Presidential office on October 1, 1882.

The first schoolhouse in Augusta was erected in 1870. This was an exceptionally large and good building for the times, and sufficed for all the wants of the city until 1880, when the present fine building was erected. This is of stone, two stories high and has six rooms. It is in charge of O. E. Olin, principal, and Miss Mary Betts, assistant. Six grades are taught, and six teachers employed. The public schools of the city have always been noted for their excellence, and those of 1882-'83 will suffer nothing by comparison with those of earlier years.

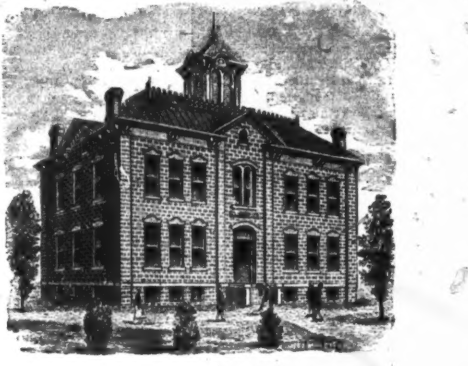
The first train on the St. Louis & San Francisco road reached this city on May 8, 1880. This was the signal for a rapid increase of the city's population and a fair launch upon the tide of prosperity now enjoyed. In the spring of 1881, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe road began to build southward from El Dorado, and on August 2d reached this place.

CITY GOVERNMENT, CHURCHES AND SOCIETIES.

Augusta was incorporated as a town in 1871, the Board of Trustees consisting of W. A. Shannon, chairman; C. N. James, G. W. Brown and J. R. Nixon. This organization lasted but a short time, and April 13, 1871, the town became a city of the third class with W. A. Shannon, Mayor; C. P. Garland, City Clerk; N. A. McKitrick, G. W. Brown, T. W. Mitchell, L. N. Blood and O. F. Smith, Councilmen; E. M. Clifford was Mayor in 1872; N. A. McKitrick, 1873; L. N. Blood, 1874; H. D. Hill, 1875-76; A. J. Paul, 1877-78-79; Charles H. Kurtz, 1880; J. W. Ground, 1881-82. J. McCollum became City Clerk in 1871-72; John Reid and Thomas Mason served in 1873; G. P. Garland, 1874; J. W. Champion, 1875-76; C. C. VanWinter, 1877-78-79-80; F. L. Jones, 1881-83.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—Augusta circuit was formed in the winter of 1870-71, by Rev. E. S. Snow, a superannuate of the New England circuit. Rev. C. A. Stine took charge of the work in October, 1870, and remained upon it during 1871-72. Rev. Enos S. King was pastor in 1873; Rev. Walter Oakley in 1874, and Rev. Geo. W. Harrison in 1875. Up to this time the society had worshiped in the schoolhouse and in Good Templars Hall, but this year the fine stone church, 30x50 feet, costing $2,485.35, was erected. A parsonage was built near the church in 1878 at a cost of $500. Returning to the list of pastors of the church we find Revs. John Harris, 1876; I. N. Boycourt, 1877; J. Albert Hyden, 1878; W. H. Cline, 1879-81; E. C. Brooks, 1881-83. The society now has a membership of 106. A Sabbath school established in 1877, has an average attendance of 100 and is in charge of Mr. George Sullivan. On one Sabbath of the month services are conducted by Rev. W. H. Munger, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, which has a fine building in Fairview Township.

The Baptist Church at this point was at its organization, a very weak one. Its first pastor was Rev. Jesse Stone, who preached about 1875. At that time a small building on Main street, now used as a carpenter shop, was occupied for services. A church edifice was built in 1878 at a cost of $2,000, and a parsonage purchased in 1882 at a cost of $600. This improvement was accomplished in the pastorate of Rev. C. G. Manly, who held office five years, giving place to Rev. Francis Rice, the present incumbent, in 1882. The society now has a membership of sixty-three. A Sabbath school was organized at an early day and now has an average attendance of sixty-three. It is in charge of E. Hill.



PUBLIC SCHOOL, AUGUSTA.

The Presbyterian Church was organized on November 24, 1878, by a committee sent by the Presbytery. For some time the church was unsupplied, but in October, 1879, secured the services of Rev. P. Reed, who still is in charge. Services were held in the Baptist church for six months, then in Cutter's Opera House, and then in the present church building. This is the old schoolhouse remodeled and refitted at a total cost of $1,500. The present membership of the society is sixteen. A Sabbath school organized August 17, 1880, is now in charge of Dr. J. W. Brown and has an average attendance of sixty. Since the organization of the church at Augusta several branch societies have been organized; one at Waverly schoolhouse, organized in 1879, has a membership of 23 and is supplied by Rev. P. Reed. Another at Indianola schoolhouse is supplied, at present, by Rev. G. E. Bicknell, of Plum Grove.

St. Henry's Catholic Church was organized in 1879 by Father Thomas J. McCaul, of Witchita, who still supplies it. A church building 20x40 and costing $500 was erected the same year, and services conducted once a month. Prior to the location of the church in Augusta there had been irregular services at the houses of communicants in this part of the county. The organization is now one of considerable strength, having a membership of 150.

Mystic Tie Lodge, No. 74, A. F. & A. M. was chartered on October 22, 1868. The charter officers of the lodge were C. N. James, W. M.; J. W. Douglass, S. W.; Thomas Stewart, J. W. THF PRESS AND OTHER BUSINESS INTERESTS.

The Crescent.—This paper was established at Augusta in 1870 by Putnam & Perry. After a brief time the paper passed into the hands of the senior partner, and subsequently into those of Mr. J. B. Davis, who changed the name to the Republican, and soon after sold the material out of the county.

The Southern Kansas Gazette was first issued on July 4, 1874, by C. H. & J. A. Kurtz. Under this management it was conducted until the fall of 1879, when it passed into the hands of C. H. Kurtz alone. It has always been an eight column folio sheet of strong Republican views, has now a circulation of 800, and is issued on Thursdays. The press and much of the type are of historic interest, having been the property of old John Brown, of Osawatomie and world-wide fame. In the attack on Brown the printing office was raided, the type pied, and the press thrown into the brush and broken. From Osawatomie the entire outfit traveled to Paola, Florence, and finally to Augusta, where it is now doing good work.

The Augusta Republican was started on June 9, 1879, by W. A. Albin, who still owns and edits it. Its first form, an eight column folio, has been preserved, and the paper has now reached a circulation of 675 weekly. It is issued on Wednesday of each week from the publication office, in the basement of G. W. Brown's bank building. Its politics are straight Republican.

Banking.—The first bank in Augusta, as well as in the county, was the private banking house of G. W. Brown. This institution, as a private concern, gives no statement of its resources, which, however, are known to be ample. A fine stone building was erected in 1880 at a cost of $10,000. This is used on the lower floor for banking and on the upper for residence purposes.

Reid's Bank.—This bank is also a private institution. It was started on September 18, 1880, by John Reid, who now operates it. No statement is made of its resources, but they are known to be about $30,000, of which $20,000 is cash, subject to demand.

City Mills.—The Augusta City Mills were built in 1870 by Manly Bros., who operated them until 1879 when they were purchased by A. J. & J. W. Ground, who now operate them. Upon taking possession the new owners completely remodeled the mills, making them worth to-day $10,000. Four run of buhr stones are kept in motion by a sixty horse power engine and have a capacity of sixty barrels of fine flour per day. The mill building, which is 40x50 and two stories in height, stands on the line of the A., T. & S. F. Ry., in the southeastern part of the city.

The Haines Elevator.—This elevator was built in 1882, the old corn mill, which now forms part of the building, having already been in operation several years. The elevator has a capacity of 2,000 bushels of corn and 500 bushels of wheat per twenty-four hours. Power is furnished by a twelve-horse power engine.

At twenty-one years of age, he started out, adopting Horace Greeley's advice to young men to "go West and grow up with the country;" first locating for a short time at Shelbyville, Ill., and then going to Whitesides County, where he remained for three years, learning and working at the carpenter's trade. In January, 1858, he returned to New York, and was married to Miss Mary J. Weaver, a resident of Hammond, St. Lawrence Co., N. In the spring of the next year, he removed to Rockbridge, Greene Co., Ill., where he remained until the fall of 1868, in the contracting and building business. Having by economy and industry accumulated enough to embark in some other business, in the fall of that year he removed to Clarence, Cedar Co., Iowa, where he started in the banking business, in December, 1868. He only remained in Clarence until July, 1870, when he sold out and again started on a tour to a newer country, traveling by wagon, and camping out through Iowa, Dakota, Nebraska and Kansas, and in October, arrived in Butler County, Kan., and located at Augusta. DOUGLASS.

Douglass takes its name from Joseph Douglass, by whom it was laid out on December 17, 1869. It is located near the confluence of the Great and Little Walnut, twenty-four miles south of El Dorado, the county seat. It is the terminus of the Walnut Valley branch of the A., T. & S. F. Railway, which was completed to this point on August 1, 1881. Since the completion of this line, the town has had a rapid growth and now claims a population of 700, and twenty-five live business houses.

The accounts of various old settlers differ materially on points of early settlement. It seems to be pretty well settled, however, that the party consisting of C. H. Lamb, two brothers and John S. White were the first to arrive on the scene. They brought with them three wagon-loads of furniture and goods, which were deposited on the unbroken prairie. White, who was a carpenter, went to work at once, and July 22, 1869, two days after their arrival, had constructed a rough house, 12x16, into which all hands were glad to turn for shelter. Work was at once begun on the Douglass hotel, and, on August 24, Lamb and his family moved into the new building.

Douglass had no town organization and no officers prior to those elected in 1879, when it became a city of the third class. C. B. Lowe, the first Mayor, held office until 1882, when L. R. Bump was elected. E. Stratford, the City Clerk of 1879 was succeeded in 1880 by F. W. Rash, who still holds the position. City Treasurers have been D. P. Blood, 1879; F. C. Wise, 1880; R. H. Snell, 1881–82. Police Judges, E. Stratford, 1879; H. S. Hulse, 1880; R. H. Schofield, 1881; H. S. Schofield, 1882. The present Council is composed of Sol. Wise, L. W. Bell, John Mitchell, A. T. Havens and Samuel Cramer.

The first postal facilities afforded the place were obtained by private subscription, in 1869, and the duties of postmaster performed by J. W. Douglass. The following year a government service was secured, and C. H. Lamb placed in charge of the office. Lamb was succeeded on March 19, 1872, by C. Calnoun, and he by David Young, who held the office until December 12, 1877, when J. B. Ives, the present incumbent, took charge. The first money order issued from Douglass bears date October 1, 1877, and was procured by Levi E. Wright, in favor of the Moline Plow Company. The office now occupies the rear portion of Neil Wilkie's bank building.

The educational history of Douglass begins with the spring of 1870, when Miss Stine, now Mrs. George L. Fox, taught a subscription school. A district school house was built in 1871, at a cost of $3,000, and school taught that year by Miss Alma Henderson, now Mrs. Neil Wilkie, who also taught in 1872. From this point to 1876, the records fail to give the names of the teachers employed, the first entry after 1872 being that recording the engagement of Prof. J. W. Shively, who taught in 1876–77; J. C. Elliott taught in 1878–79; H. S. Hulse, in 1880; A. Gridley in 1881, and T. Schumaker in 1882. The school now numbers nearly 200 scholars, and has so far outgrown the school building as to necessitate the renting of two rooms in town, and the employment of four teachers.

CHURCHES, SOCIETIES, ETC.

The first religious service of which there is any account was a Sabbath school conducted in 1868 by Mrs. John T. Stanley, for the benefit of her own children and those of Mr. John Long. It is said that Rev. S. L. Friend preached at this point in 1868, but the report lacks confirmation. According to the recollection of the best informed old settlers the first regular preaching service was conducted in the newly completed Douglass House, on August 29, 1869, Rev. Mr. Saxby, a Baptist minister officiating. The second sermon was delivered by the same clergyman on September 26, 1869. On October 6, following, Rev. C. R. Rice, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, delivered an address. The next religious exercises were held by Rev. J. Copeland, a Congregational preacher who lived at Augusta. Beginning on Thursday, February 8, 1870, he preached four evenings, and on leaving made arrangements to preach at this point once a month. During the summer of 1870 the place of service was changed to the residence of Mr. John T. Stanley. Here, the same year, Rev. John S. Johnston, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, gathered a Sabbath school of twenty-five members. In the spring of 1870, Rev. Mr. Gordon, of El Dorado, made an appointment to preach at Mr. Stanley's, but filled it only a few times. About this time the separate church societies came into being and the religious history of the town began to cluster around the different creeds, and will be found in their history.

The Methodist Church at Douglass was first gathered together by a young clergyman whose name appears as "Bro. Zellers." Coming in May from his claim on the Arkansas, this energetic young man continued to preach until January, 1871, when, being obliged to make all his appointments on foot, and Rev. J. Copeland, of Augusta, being in this field, Mr. Zellers (or Zealers) discontinued preaching. Although no society had been gathered prior to 1870, Rev. C. E. Rice, a Methodist Presiding Elder, had preached here on October 6, 1869. The work was taken up in 1871, by Rev. C. A. Stine; in 1872, by S. A. Green; 1873, J. Vickars; 1874, J. L. Stratford; 1875, D. L. Knowles, and from October 24, J. L. Rose; 1876-77, G. W. Harrison; 1878-79, C. A. Stine. In 1880, B. C. Swartz was appointed, but resigned, and I. N. Wilson took charge. In 1881, Rev. W. H. Rose was appointed, and still remains pastor. A fine stone church was begun in 1879 and completed in November, 1881, at a cost of $3,000. It has a seating capacity of two hundred. The membership of the society is now eighty. A separate Sabbath school was organized in January, 1879, and has now an average attendance of eighty. It is in charge of C. A. Hamlin.

The Christian Church was organized in 1874, by Rev. E. E. Harvey, who remained its pastor until succeeded in 1879 by D. M. Doty. C. W. Yard was placed in charge in 1880, and still remains. A neat church was erected in 1878, at a cost of $1,200. The present enrollment of the society is eighty. Services are held every second Sunday. Besides the church here, there are appointments at Rock Valley schoolhouse and Burden. The congregation numbers thirty-five at each point.

The Congregational Church was organized on December 9, 1877, under the pastorate of Rev. J. B. Ives, who still holds the charge. At the time of organization careful gleaning produced but a membership of twelve, but the growth of the town, and the earnest labors of Mr. Ives, have increased this number to over forty. At present the society has no church building, but one is already designed, and will be built in 1883, at a cost of about $4,000. A Sabbath school was organized some time before the church, and now has an average attendance. Meetings were first held in the Methodist Church, but have recently been transferred to Snell's Hall.

The Baptist Church was organized in June, 1882, with fourteen members, and in charge of Rev. J. Hopkins, who still remains. Services are held twice a month in the Methodist Church. As soon as practicable a church edifice will be erected by this society, which has already a parsonage, valued at $350, and a building lot, 50x140 feet, for church purposes.

Douglass Lodge No. 151, A. F. & A. M., was organized October 22, 1874, the names appearing in the charter being those of G. D. Prindle, W. M.; Sol. Wise, S. W.; Jas. Harney, J. W. This hall was built by the society at a cost of $2,000, and serves as the lodge room of six different orders—all that exist in the city. The present officers of the lodge are: James Shanks, W. The property of the lodge consists of regalia to the value of $300. Its present officers are: J. H. Thompson, N. G.; R. W. Ogg, V. G.; F. W. Rash, treasurer; L. Shamleffer, P. S.; L. J. Allison, R. Meetings are held on the first and third Tuesdays of each month in Masonic hall. The Union now numbers fourteen.

Douglass Post, No. 97, G. A. R. was organized on July 4, 1882, with a membership of thirty-two. The officers first elected are those of the present time. They are: F. W. Rash, P. C.; R. H. Meetings are held on the first and third Monday of each month, in Masonic Hall. The lodge now numbers fifteen.

The Douglass Index appeared for the first time on July 2, 1880, under the management of H. H. Cole. It was first a seven-column folio, but changed with the number of January 14, 1881, to a regulation eight-column. Cole continued the paper until October 22, 1880, when he sold out to M. R. Bowman. On March 4, 1881, the paper came out under the ownership of Bowman & Hulse. December 2, Rev. J. B. Ives took the paper for a few weeks, and January 1, 1882, it passed into the hands of J. S. Soule, the present publisher. January 27, 1882, the paper became an eight-page sheet. It now has a circulation of o er 400. Great credit is due Mr. Soule for the great typographical improvement he has made in his paper as well as for the excellence of its news columns.

The Union Flouring Mill, valued at $13,000, and one of the finest in the State, was built in 1881, by Lee, Wise & Kirk. It has four run of buhr-stones, and can turn out 100 barrels of fine flour daily. Power is furnished by an engine of seventy-five horse power. Wheat is procured direct from the farmers, and none imported, and none but "new process" flour manufactured.

The first banking transacted in the town was done by W. P. Note, who opened a private bank in 1880. In 1881 Neil Wilkie opened a branch of the Exchange Bank of El Dorado, and in 1882, started a private bank of his own, which now does a large business.

LEON.

Leon is situated on the line of the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway, 476 miles west of St. Louis, 113 miles west of Oswego, and 12 miles east of Augusta. It occupies a high point in the world, the west bank of Little Walnut near which the town stands, being 1340 feet above sea level. The town was first christened Noble, but it was discovered that another point in the State bore that name and the new town became the namesake of Leon, Iowa, and also, in the minds of its projectors, of the far-famed Ponce de Leon. The town site was laid out and surveyed in November, 1879, and a town company formed. This consisted of M. A. Palmer, C. Tabing, J. King, J. M. Watson and C. R. Noe. To the latter gentleman belonged the land of the town site—sixty acres. The first building erected in the town was the blacksmith shop of H. Belton, erected in 1879. The second was the store and residence of J. M. Watson, erected early in 1880. What the third was is uncertain, as the rush of construction became so great that not days or weeks but hours gave precedence. This rapid growth continued through the year and at its close Leon had buildings to the value of $33,325, and a population of between 250 and 300. This year saw the advent of the first physician, I. M. Wells; the first attorney, J. M. Dilts; and the first merchant, F. W. Beckmeyer, who occupied the Watson store building. The first birth in the town was that of a child of Joseph Denton; the first death an unknown railroad hand; the first wedding, Charles Craig and Mrs. Carrie Hollander.

Incorporation and Officers.—On March 15, 1882, Leon became a city of the third class without passing through any intermediate town organization. Its officers then elected still hold their positions. They are: Levi Kiser, Mayor; D. W. Poe, City Clerk; J. S. Calvert, Police Judge; W. J. Cunningham, J. Kunkle, C. Lipscomb, G. A. Kenoyer and Ben. H. Wood, Councilmen.

Leon, on October 21, 1882, was a model city for one of its age. Up both sides of the long Main street ran blocks of stores, not palatial by any means but good enough to do a large business in. Early on the morning of Monday the 23d, the street presented a far different aspect. Fire had taken possession of the best block of the city and all efforts to check it with the feeble means at hand were unavailing, it burned till there was no more to destroy, and the block, save the building on the southwest corner, was leveled. The buildings destroyed were the barber shop of Robert Grunewell; harness shop of A. A. Jones; J. H. Cecil's two store buildings, one of which was also used for residence purposes; Waddell & Dick's meat market, the building owned by H. H. Clements; a billiard hall also owned by Clements; Snyder & Dobbins' store building; T. H. McCormick's store building, and the Commercial Hotel. The aggregate loss by this fire may be roughly stated at $10,000. No efforts have thus far been made to rebuild upon the burned block, but there will undoubtedly be a stirring of the ashes ere long.

The postoffice at Leon was established in March, 1880, with G. A. Kenoyer, who still holds the position, as Postmaster. There has been a star postoffice known as Little Walnut, on the creek, about a mile south, and here Kenoyer became Postmaster January 1, 1879. On the establishment of Leon Little Walnut was discontinued. The postoffice was first located in the store of Kenoyer & Chenoweth, and upon the dissolution of that firm, moved across the street to its present quarters. It was made a money order office on August 15, 1881, and the first order purchased by G. W. Churchill.

Prior to the laying out of Leon the district schoolhouse stood a half mile east of the town site. This building was moved to town in the fall of 1881, and formed part of the spacious house completed that year at a cost of $2 000. S. L. Hodge was secured as principal of the school, and still holds that position. One assistant only was needed the first year, but in 1882 a second was engaged to properly handle the 180 children now in attendance. What 1883 will bring forth no one can say, but it seems probable that ere long still further accommodations and more teachers must be secured.

The city now occupies considerably more than the sixty acres of the original town site, C. R Noe having made two additions amounting to fifty-five acres, and J. King one of three acres. Industries of all sorts are constantly increasing and the building of neat residences constantly going on. Already the population numbers 600, and the close of 1883 will bring it well up toward 1,000.

LOCAL MATTERS.

The Baptist Church at this point was organized on May 29, 1880, by Rev. G. W. Churchill, who still remains in charge. When first organized the society had but fourteen members, but earnest work has increased this number to sixty-four. A fine church building was erected in 1882, at a cost of $1,200. Prior to its completion services had been held every second Sabbath in the Methodist church. Besides this society Mr. Churchill supplies one of twenty at Logan schoolhouse, and one of thirty-five at Little Walnut. The society has no separate Sabbath-school.

The Methodist Church at this point is in a sense a continuation of the class which prior to 1880 assembled at Chenoweth schoolhouse. A church edifice was begun in 1880 and completed the following year, at a cost of nearly $2,000, the parsonage built at the same time bringing the total outlay up to fully that amount. The society now has over 100 members, and is growing rapidly, under the labors of Rev. L. J. VanLandigham. Services are held on three out of four Sabbaths. A Sabbath school organized in 1881 is flourishing under the superintendence of Prof. S. L. Hodge. Other appointments supplied from this point are the Center, Economy, Quito and Brickley schoolhouses.

The Christian Church.—Like the Methodist, the Christian society had been holding services at the the Chenoweth school house. There they had been in charge of Elder E. E. Harvey, of El Dorado, with A. Butt as local preacher and the same arrangement was continued after the removal to town. A fine church building was completed in November 1882 at a cost of $1,400. The church has a membership of 100. A separate Sabbath school was organized in 1881 and has been successfully carried on since that time by S. H. Wooton, superintendent.

The Leon Indicator was first printed in January, 1880, coming out as a three column folio about the size of a pocket handkerchief from the Walnut Valley Times office. The second issue was a trifle larger, had four columns, and appeared May 8, 1880. However, the paper was about fitted to the town, which had but few houses and a future entirely dependent upon the energy of its projectors. This was just the quality they had, however, and on June 18, 1880, the Indicator came out as a seven-column folio of regulation size, printed on its own press and from its own type. C. R. Noe who had accomplished this great undertaking for a new town, did not rest content but immediately set about building an office for his material and ere the close of 1880, had a substantial one costing $850. Here, under the same management, the Indicator is still published on Thursday of each week. The paper which is straight Republican has attained a circulation of 550.

Leon City Mills.—These mills were completed in April, 1881, by Ward, Petrow & Tong. This firm was shortly after changed to Petrow & Tong, and later to Petrow & Son, under which style it is now conducted. The mill buildings are located in the southeast part of town near the railway; are 50x40 feet, and two stories in height. Power is furnished by an engine of sixty horse-power. Three run of buhr-stones are used, and a capacity of turning out sixty-six barrels of flour per day attained. The total cost of building and fixtures is $12,000; only "new process" flour is manufactured. Both the wheat and corn used here are bought of the neighboring farmers, and so rich are the resources of this part of the country that there has never been a necessity for importing grain.

ANDOVER.

Andover is a live little town of five stores and a population of 150. It is located on the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway, twelve miles west of Augusta and about the same distance east of Wichita. The land upon which it stands was entered by E. Wagner, but later sold to Charles Glancy, who, in December, 1880, laid out the town. The first building on the town site was the store and residence of G. W. Harrison; the second the store of John Bayless. The first birth in the new town was that of a daughter of G. W. Harrison; the first marriage Joseph Haden and Matilda Riddle; the first death is as yet an event of the future. The first hotel was completed in 1881, by J. C. Lines, who still runs it.

Soon after the erection of the first building of the town, the postoffice. which had been located a short distance from town, was moved in, and the present Postmaster, G. W. Harrison, appointed.

In 1875, prior to the laying out of Andover, a wooden district school was built at a point near where the town now stands. Upon the birth of the town it was decided to move the school to that point. This was done and a fine schoolhouse, of which the old building forms the L, erected at a cost of $2,000. This work was completed in 1882. and the building occupied that fall. LABETTE COUNTY.

BOUNDARIES AND NATURAL FEATURES.

LABETTE County is in the southeastern part of Kansas, in the second tier of counties from Missouri. It is bounded on the north by Neosho County, on the East by Crawford and Cherokee counties, on the south by the Indian Territory, and on the west by Montgomery County.

The general surface of the county is undulating, sloping gently toward the south in the direction of the flow of the streams. Along the water courses, are broad level bottom lands, comprising in the aggregate about one-fifth of the entire area of the county. That particularly along the Neosho is remarkable for its extent, beauty and fertility. Rising gracefully from these, are the undulating and picturesque divides. The soil generally is of superior fertility, all of which is susceptible of cultivation, there being no waste land to speak of in the county.

The county is well watered, being traversed by the Neosho River from north to south, with which numerous creeks become confluent, the most important of these being Big and Little Labette, Hackberry, Snow, Big Hill and Pumpkin creeks and others of less size.

The Neosho River, famed for its unsurpassed beauty, is a stream of considerable magnitude on which small steamboats are run on pleasure excursions.

About ten per cent of the area of the county is timbered, which is confined to belts along the streams, and which vary in width from a half to three-quarters of a mile along the smaller streams, and to two miles along the Neosho River. The principal varieties are black walnut, hickory, pecan, sycamore, hackberry, red and white elm, red, burr, barren and Spanish oak, mulberry, willow, cottonwood and maple. The walnut timber is of the best variety and the trees of large size. The largest tree of this kind, in the county, was felled some time since, measuring nine feet in diameter. The hickory timber is considered of the best quality, and of finer grain than that found in the timbered States in the East, and is valued for its excellence in manufacturing. Much attention is given to the growth of artificial timber, and it is only a question of short time when the county will abound with cultivated forests.

Flag, sand and lime stone are abundant and of the best grades, valuable for building and paving purposes.

Coal is found in various parts of the county, but in such limited quantities, as not to justify extensive mining operations, there being only one or two places where mining is carried on in a small way.

EARLY HISTORY.

The territory now comprising Labette County formerly formed a part of the territory known as the Osage ceded lands. A portion of this territory was laid off, including the counties of Neosho and Labette, and was called Dorn County, in honor of A. J. Dorn, who acted as Indian Agent for the Osages and other tribes from 1857 to 1867. But the patriotic Legislature of 1865 did not favor the name Dorn, by reason of political affiliations, and changed it to that of Neosho. The treaty, through which the United States Government sought to obtain these lands from the Osages, had been pending for several years, but owing to the inauguration of the civil war, and the alliance of some of the tribe with the Confederate cause, its consummation was delayed. The treaty was made by the Government agents and he Indians at a trading post which stood near the town of Erie, September 25, 1865. It was then sent to Washington to be ratified by Congress and the President, and the bill authorizing the settlement of the newly acquired district, after undergoing amendment favoring the donation of a large tract to the railroads under proposal of building, was, with the treaty, ratified and signed by President Johnson.

The territory having thus come into the possession of the Government and opened to settlement, was soon overrun with settlers and emigrants. As a natural result of the situation, the north part of the county was first to be settled up, in which lay the controlling political influence. When settlements became established in the southern part, they began to agitate the division of the county, which now embraced an area inconveniently large. Among those in this section a political organization was effected, and in the fall of 1866 a full corps of county officers was elected; but not being in conformity to the laws, was pronounced invalid. At this election, C. H. Bent was chosen representative, who, when the session of the Legislature convened, went to the capital to take his seat, but his credentials were not recognized until the passage of the division act by that Legislature. Thus was the division of Neosho County effected, and the county of Labette created.

February 7, 1867, an act was passed by the Legislature and approved by the Governor, organizing Labette County, and defining its boundaries. It was to include the territory extending from the sixth standard parallel on the north, to the boundary of the State on the south, and from the Cherokee Neutral Lands on the east to the Osage Reserve on the west.

February 26, 1867, another act made these boundaries even more definite, by declaring that the western boundary of the Cherokee Neutral Lands should be identical with the eastern boundary of Labette County.

The next and thus far the latest legislation upon the subject, was an act apapproved March 3, 1868, and which took effect October 31, 1868, as follows:

> The county of Labette is bounded as follows: Commencing at a point on the sixth standard parallel where the west line of the Cherokee Neutral Lands crosses said sixth standard parallel, etc., as in Section 2, of the act approved February 7, 1867, already quoted, with the following proviso:
>
> That the same shall be the boundaries of Labette County, unless the same shall be changed by the provisions of Section 12, of this bill; and in the event of said provisions taking effect, the boundaries shall conform to the provisions of said Section 12.*

It will be seen that Section 12, without its proviso, establishes the section line commencing at the southwest corner of Section 14, Township 31, Range 21, as the west line of Cherokee County. This section line is one mile and ninety rods west of the west line of the Cherokee Neutral Lands, which, without the proviso of Section 12, is the east line of Labette County. And, as the provisions of Section 12 never went into effect, there having never been any election held to determine whether this strip extending from the sixth standard parallel soutaward to the Neosho River, and one mile and ninety rods in width, the two sections of the statute conflict with each other in such a way as to place the strip in both counties. So far some of the settlers living thereon pay taxes in Labette County, some in Cherokee.

* For the provisions of Section 12, see history of Cherokee County.

The area of Labette County, approximates 650 square miles, or 416,000 acres.

The county was named after Labette Creek, the largest stream except the Neosho River within its limits. According to tradition the creek obtained its name from the following incident: In the year 1845 some French trappers pitched their camp near a crossing of this creek a few miles above its confluence with the Neosho River. A meal was prepared and the Frenchmen had sat down to partake of it when a deer came in sight. A general chase ensued and the deer was killed. During the absence of the trappers from camp, in pursuit of the deer, a pole-cat came along and made himself so disagreeable that they returned but to depart at once. One of them, who knew the cause of the difficulty, exclaimed as he turned away: "Oh! La Bete! La Bete!" Oh! The beast! The beast! Afterwards the name took the form La Bette, and it is frequently so written in the county records. Generally, however, it is written Labette.

The exact date when the first white man made anything like a permanent settlement in what is now Labette County, is not fully determined. Some give it that John Mathews, who established a trading post where Oswego now is in 1840, was the first, and who certainly was the first of whom anything is no known, continuing here as he did until other settlements were made.

Not far from where Oswego now stands, were found the remains of an old ston chimney in ruins; overgrown auger holes in trees and bits of tobacco, pipes, etc., were found, and at another place timber had been cleared away and the ground showed marks of having been once cultivated; trees bearing marks of having been cut with an axe, the scars having long since been overgrown, gave positive evidence that white men had been here and formed some sort of a settlement prior to that made by Mathews. Farther than such traces, no information is found concerning the character of these settlers, nor what became of them.

As early as 1853, Dr. George Lilse, formerly a prominent physician of Belmont, Ohio obtained leave from A. J. Dorn, Indian Agent, to settle in the southeast part of the county, where he carried on a trading business and kept a sort of gun shop. Prior to this, however, James Childers had established a trading post near the same place.

Besides those named, this settlement numbered several others, among whom were G. Hanson, William Doudna, George Walker, Larkin McGee, McMurphy, ths Rogers and Blythe families, etc. In the early part of 1858, J. P. Barnaby, a preacher belonging to the Southern Methodist Church, established a circuit including this settlement and embracing a scope of country of about 150 miles around. In October of that year Rev. J. E. Ryan succeeded to the circuit. These parties, with a number of half breeds and Cherokee Indians along the Neosho, made up the bulk of the settlement that had been made within the territory afterward included within the limits of Labette County, up to the beginning of the Rebellion. At an early stage of the war, Mathews allied himself to the cause of the Confederacy, organized a body of Confederate troops, some of whom killed Union men and brutally treated the inhabitants; burned the town of Humboldt leaving only the Masonic lodge standing.

Several futile attempts were made to capture the band, which was finally pursued by a body of United States troops under Colonel Blunt, overtaken near Chetopa, and Mathews shot and killed, and his houses at Oswego burned. Some writers charge Mathews with being a heartless and brutal man, but this is denied by others, who say that Mathews was by no means a brutal character, but that his son John was a desperado, whose many deeds of crime and murder were often unjnstly imputed to his father. Mathews had an Indian wife and was probably unjustly charged with being surrounded by a pack of Indians, half-breeds, and ruffian whites, he being their leader and exponent.

These acts of disorder and invasion almost annihilated the settlement, some being killed, while others sought more congenial places. It is stated by good authority, that from 1860 to 1865 there were only two white men living within the limits of the county, during any part of this period, so effectually did the disorder produced by the Rebellion destroy the embryo settlements. These were S. M. Collins and A. T. Dickerman, who settled near where Erie was afterward located, and who, in July, 1865, by permit of White Hair, chief of the Osages, removed to a point on Labette Creek about four miles south of the present site of Oswego.

During the fall of 1865, after peace was declared and order restored, the return of refugee settlers began to be made, while others, returning from the wars, finding their places filled or their fortunes destroyed by reason of the conflict, turned to the West with the hope of becoming established in its opening fields and regaining what in the defense of their country, they had lost of time and money. The settlers who came during this time settled along the Neosho valley, extending to the line of the Indian Territory, among whom were: J. C. Rexford, A. P. Elsbee, C. C. Clover, D. M. Clover, Bergen Van Ness, C. E. Simmons, B. F. Simmons, John Modesitt, Norris Harrar, Cal. Watkins, William White and sons, Grant Reaves and others.

The news of the treaty of September 25, 1865, being made with the Osage Indians, and the prospect of the land being soon opened to settlement, was the main stimulus in bringing in settlers, who soon flocked in by the hundreds. After the treaty had been duly signed, and while it was pending before Congress and awaiting ratification by the President, the settlers were in the most anxious suspense. The Indians had gone West upon their annual hunting expedition and most of the whites had come in in their absence and laid claim to their lands.

Realizing their want of authority, the settlers were very much alarmed lest the treaty should not be fully completed and the return of the Indians find them trespassers, insomuch that the inquiry, "Is the treaty ratified yet?" or "When do you think the Osages will return?" became common among settlers. The imperfect and limited means of obtaining information, since postoffices were distant and but few papers found their way thither, added to the necessity of one neighbor seeking his information from another who, perchance, might be in possession of it.

True to the fears of the settlers, the Indians returning found their little farms occupied by the whites, without authority, the treaty not having been ratified nor the Indians paid for their lands according to the stipulations of the treaty. The heavy immigration during the spring of 1866, largely increased the number of settlers, and the Osages were dissatisfied with this unwarranted occupation of their lands. They accordingly demanded of their agent, Maj. Snow, that the intruders be removed, which the settlers were fearful would be done sooner or later. A military order was published commanding all settlers without special permit to at once remove from the territory. This move on the part of the agent, created considerable consternation among settlers and checked immigration.

In May, 1866, about 300 of the settlers assembled in a convention near the mouth of Hickory Creek to determine what was best to be done. It was the voice of the convention to appoint a deputy, whose duty it was to negotiate terms with Agent Snow and the Osages, by which the settlers might be permitted to remain and cultivate their claims. The deputy, whom they had appointed, at once entered upon the discharge of his duty, and upon approaching the lordly official, was treated with humiliating contempt. The agent would listen to nothing, but domineeringly asserted that the settlers must remove or they would be expelled and roughly handled. But his humble petitioner gave him to understand there were many brave men among the alleged wrong-doers, who were not to be frightened by threats. Snow at length became less austere, and an arrangement was finally perfected by which the Osages were willing to allow the settlers to remain by their paying $1 per year, until the treaty was ratified, for the occupancy of a claim, which met the approval of all parties concerned.

The winter of 1866 will long be remembered by the early settlers, as a season of hardship, suffering and dismay. The winter was cold and bleak, with much rainfall, so that the streams were swollen full bank most of the time, which, without ferry or bridges, became impassable by teams, and thus travel and communication were almost entirely cut off, and the settlers literally hemmed in. The dwellings were but rude huts, insufficient to keep out the penetrating winds or the rain, and in consequence there was much sickness. Provisions were often scant, by reason of having to be procured from Missouri, having to be transported from fifty to a hundred miles by team, and being of the coarsest character, consisting chiefly of corn meal and rusty bacon. At one time, the settlers were almost destitute of provisions. Copious rains had prevailed, and the streams were boisterous and impassable As soon as the water had run down, so that the creeks and rivers could be safely forded, teams were dispatched to Missouri to procure provisions. During their absence the rains again set in and the streams again filled, and when the teams reached the Neosho, in return, they found it impossible to cross. Numbers had gathered on the opposite side of the river, anxious to have some means devised by which they might obtain rations. Finally a sort of raft was improvised and launched on the perilous stream, upon which the provisions were transported and dealt out in measure to the famishing men, women and children. Added to this, the feed for stock gave out and nearly all the cattle and horses died, either from disease or starvation. Spring came, the weather had become settled, but many whose stock had died during the winter were without teams to cultivate their lands, nor had they means to procure others. In all, it was a time which required brave men and stout-hearted women to endure.

The treaty with the Osages was ratified during the summer of 1866, and the Indians being paid for their lands were removed, and the territory thrown open to settlement. The stayed tide of immigration broke loose and spread its ebbing waters over the face of the country. The spring of 1867 found the valleys of the Neosho and all the important creeks and streams dotted with squatter shanties and resounding with the busy hum of civilized industry.

For some time bands of Indians roamed over the country on hunting expeditions, stealing and demanding rents from the settlers, which they frequently extorted from the timid, and terrifying women and children by their presence and intruding manners; but they were perfectly harmless to life and person.

In February, 1866, the settlers living on Labette and Hackberry creeks, realizing the strength of unity and uniform action, organized what was called the Labette and Hackberry Mutual Protection Society, for the purpose of protecting its members in their persons, claims and other property. G. W. Kingsbury was made president and A. T. Dickerman secretary. A similar and more extensive organization was soon afterward formed among the settlers along the Neosho, and which soon absorbed the former. In May, the Labette County Vigilance Committee of 1866 was formed, and its decisive and determined action and speedy retributive justice became a terror to law breakers. In no instance, however, did the punishment meted out extend to any very serious length. It remained for after years to present to the world a deed of brutality and bloodshed unparalleled, perhaps, in the annals of criminality. In February, 1871, a family of Hollanders, named Bender, settled on a claim in the west part of the county, about thirteen miles west of Parsons, the residence standing near the wagon road leading from Osage Mission to Independence. The family consisted of John Bender, aged sixty, his wife, aged about fifty-five, Kate, aged twenty-three, and a young man, a son, of about the same age, the relation of the latter being uncertain, since the young woman passed sometimes as the wife of the young man and again as his sister.

The house was a small frame, 16x24 feet, and divided into two apartments by a cloth partition, the front room being used as a storeroom in which they kept a small stock of goods. It was the custom of travelers on this road to stop at the place for meals, whom they brutally murdered, either for their money or to satisfy a blood-thirsty desire, since some of those murdered were known to be penniless. For some time they had been carrying on their work of human butchery before the discovery was made. Dead bodies had been found floating in the river, the cause of their death being unknown; but afterward it was supposed to be the work of the Benders.

In May, 1873, Silas Tale was passing the place, and, attracted by its look of desertion, and the starving condition of the animals about, reported the matter to L. F. Dick, Township Trustee, who, in company with a man named York, began to investigate the place. York's brother had disappeared while endeavoring to discover what had become of a man named Longoer and a little girl, who had started on their way back to Iowa by team and wagon from Independence. The team with which they started was fonud wandering upon the prairie, but the individuals had never been heard from. Upon examination the place was found as reported by Tale, the house being in order apparently as if occupied, but with no signs of any person about. As they entered the house they were met with a strong stench as that of decayed human flesh. The smell appeared to come from beneath the floor, and on endeavoring to pry up the floor a trap door was found in the center of the back room, over which stood a table. Beneath this door a hole about six feet deep was made in the ground, in which was found clotted blood. The lot back of the house, which was always kept freshly stirred, was examined and graves found. Upon exhuming the bodies, which had been buried in all manner of shapes—some with their heads downward and feet almost protruding through the ground, etc.—the body of Dr. William York, of Independence, was found; also that of the man Longoer and the little girl, besides those of four others, all of whom were identified.

The Benders, fearing detection, had fled the place some time in April, 1873, Attempts to discover the fiends were at once made. Several arrests were made of parties thought to be accomplices, but no revelation could be extorted. Tde escape of the parties was so complete that no trace of them was discovered for years after, although the impression has been that they met their just doom at the hands of their pursuers soon after their flight. The impression was confirmed into conviction in December, 1882, by an article published in the St. Louis Republican, the information being given by Capt. J. C. Reevs, who was living at Independence, Kan., at the time the tragedy occurred. The statement in substance was as follows:

The Benders kept an inn on a lonely road leading from Parsons to Cherryvale. The house stood in a wide open prairie, in the western part of Labette County, about six miles from Cherryvale.

It was usual for travelers to stop at the place for meals, and often took lodging over night. It was so arranged in the house, that when a traveler was seated at the table, a thin curtain hung loosely behind him, through which might be seen the position of his head. When anyone, whom the Benders supposed had money or valuables upon their person, stopped for a meal, they were given a seat at the table in front of this curtain, and while dispatching the meal, they were struck a blow upon the head with an axe or hammer in the hands of some one behind the curtain. The victim was either killed outright by the blow, or badly stunned, in which case he would be treated to additional blows until life was extinct. After this, his pockets were rifled of their contents, and the body was dropped through the trap door in the floor, into the pit beneath, and from here it was taken, under cover of night, and buried in a rude grave in the lot behind the house. For some time they had carried on their bloody work without detection. The disappearance of Dr. York, a citizen of Independence, and the search that was made to ascertain what had become of him, led to their discovery.

Dr. York had gone to Fort Scott, Kan., to sell a house and lot in that place. The sale was negotiated, but no money was paid, and York, having completed his business, started back to Independence. His wife was very ill at the time, and his return was expected the same night. Failing to put in an appearance, his brother, Col. York, aware of the critical condition of the doctor's wife, went in search of him. Reaching Parsons, Col. York found that his brother had been seen at that place; that he had purchased some cigars, and had left for Independence. Col. York then followed him up, making inquiry for him along the way, finding that he had been seen by three or four different persons between Parsons and the Bender place. Reaching the latter, he made inquiry if they had seen Dr. York, to which they replied that they had seen nothing of him. No traces of his having been seen beyond this point could be found. Col. York returned to Independence, got Sheriff Stone, and the two went to the Bender place. A conversation was had with John Bender, which gave them little satisfaction, but was such as to arouse their suspicions. They rode back to Independence, secured a party of men, who on the next morning repaired to Bender's house for the purpose of making some investigations. Arriving at the place, they found it deserted by the occupants. The premises were then searched, and in the rear of the house the ground showed to have been freshly stirred. Upon a removal of the loose earth, the body of Dr. York was found. Further search discovered the bodies of several other victims. The fresh trail of a wagon could be seen leading from the house across the prairie in a northerly direction. Hon. William Wright and S. S. Peterson, Deputy United States Marshal, two of the searching party, followed this trail. It led them to Thayer, a town about twelve miles to the north. Here they found the team and wagon which the Benders had abandoned, to take the train north on the L., L. & G. railroad. A dispatch was at once sent to the conductor of the train upon which they left, making inquiry in regard to them. In reply, the conductor informed them that the party had left the train at Chanute, or New Chicago. A dispatch was directed to the agent at the latter place, who, in return, reported that he had sold the Benders tickets to Chetopa, a town on the southern part of Labette County, about two miles from the Indian Territory. Wright and Peterson returned to the Bender residence, where they found Col. York and Sheriff Stone. Informing them of their discoveries, the four men hastily started for Chetopa with a relay of fresh horses. Arriving at Oswego, they again changed horses, and started for Chetopa, distant only nine miles. Arriving at the town, they learned that the Benders had taken a team and wagon that had been in waiting for them, and had gone in a southwesterly direction to Grand River, a distance of about thirty miles in the Territory. They also learned that the runaways were only about three hours' travel ahead of them. The pursuit was again hotly pressed and the fugitives were overtaken at a point about four miles from Grand River. They were immediately halted, and being confronted with imputation of their beastly crimes, the entire party was shot and killed. A hole was made in which the four bodies were buried. Thus, unceremoniously, was just and retributive punishment meted out to the Benders for their many dastardly crimes.

RAILROADS.

Labette County is abundantly supplied with the advantages of railroad transportation, four distinct lines of road running through the county north and south, and east and west. The Missouri, Kansas & Texas Road passing along the east side of the county from north to south, was built in 1870, the line being projected from Hannibal, Mo., to Denison, Texas. A branch called the Neosho Division, from Parsons to Junction City, on the Kansas Pacific Road, was also built at the same time. The St. Louis & San Francisco Road, entering the county on the east side about midway from north to south, and passing across the county in the direction a little north of west, was constructed in 1879. The Memphis, Kansas & Colorado Road, passing across the north part of the county, terminating at Cherryvale, was built during the same year. This road was built as a narrow gauge, but in the fall of 1882 it came into the hands of the Kansas City, Fort Scott & Gulf Railroad Company, and was made a standard gauge, and the name changed to that of this company. The Kansas City, Lawrence & Southern Kansas Railroad, built in 1871, passes through the northwest corner of the county on which Morehead Station is located.

ORGANIZATION AND OTHER COUNTY MATTERS.

The question relative to the division of Neosho County became agitated by those living in the southern part, in the summer of 1866. In November of that year they thought to establish a government of their own by the election of a full set of officials, which, no legal division of the county having as yet been made, or a new county created by the Legislature, was pronounced invalid. At this election C. H. Bent was chosen representative for this district, but not bearing legal credentials, was not admitted to a seat. The Legislature soon after assembling took the matter in hand, and passed the division act by which Labette County was created, and when this was done, Bent was duly admitted to a seat in the House

Upon the adjournment of the Legislature in February of the next spring, Bent called upon the Governor, S. J. Crawford, and secured the appointment of county officers, and the temporary location of a seat of government for the new county. Those appointed were: S. W. Collins, J. Rice and C. H. Talbott, Commissioners; Bergen VanNess, Probate Judge; Ellmore Craft, District Clerk; A. T. Dickerman, Clerk, and Benjamin Rice, Sheriff; and the county seat was temporarily located at Oswego.

An election was held on the third Tuesday of May, 1867, for the purpose of regularly electing county officers, at which Nathan Ames, D. C. Lowe and Mr. Shay, were elected Commissioners; Benjamin Rice, Sheriff; Bergen VanNess, Probate Judge; A. W. Jones, County Assessor; A. T. Dickerman, County Clerk; Ellsmore Craft, Clerk of the District Court; C. C. Clover, Treasurer; J. F. Newlon, Superintendent of Schools, and J. W. Parkinson, County Attorney.

The county is divided into sixteen civil township organizations.

With the creation of the county, Oswego was made temporary county seat. The question of the selection of a permanent location of a county seat came before the people in regular election on the third Tuesday of May, 1867. Three places were voted upon, namely, Oswego, Montana and Salem. The vote on each of these stood as follows: Oswego, 156; Montana, 145, and Salem, 84. Since no one place received a majority of all votes cast, there was no choice made. The Commissioners then ordered a special election for locating the seat of government, to be held in two weeks following. The two places receiving the highest number of votes at the last election were the places to be voted upon, which were Oswego and Montana. The election was duly held, and resulted in favor of Oswego, where the seat of government became permanently fixed.

The building first used by the county as a court house, was a small wooden house which the town had erected for school purposes, and was among the first buildings erected in Oswego. After the erection of a new schoolhouse, the town donated the old building to the county for a court house, which, with a small addition that was built to it, served as a court house until the erection of the new court house, in the early part of 1880. The old house, however, was insufficient for the accommodation of all the offices, part of which were kept in whatever place could be secured suitable for the purpose.

The new court house building, a moderately large, plain, two-story brick structure, was built by the citizens of Oswego, and donated to the county.

The first term of the District Court for Labette County began October 7, 1867, with William Spriggs, Judge; R. S. Cornish, Clerk; Benjamin A. Rice, Sheriff, and D. W. Clover, Deputy Clerk.

The first case tried was that of J. P. May vs. John Staginwall, and was an appeal from the Court of James Logan, Justice of the Peace.

The first case brought in the District Court, was that of Jesse A. Shoat against Mary A. Shoat, for divorce, which was withdrawn by the plaintiff, the costs being taxed against him.

H. C. Cook was elected Clerk of the District Court, in the fall of 1874, and has since succeeded to the office at each recurring election.

SCHOOLS AND COUNTY SOCIETIES.

Nothing speaks more highly for the intelligence and progressive spirit of the settlers of Labette County than the early attention they gave toward establishing schools. No sooner had a few gathered together than a school of some sort was provided and maintained for the intellectual training of the youth. And among the first buildings to be erected was that great indicator of material and mental progress, the schoolhouse. As early as 1867 a district was unofficially organized, which included within its limits the town of Oswego, in which a school was taught by Mrs. Herbaugh, and was the first school taught in Labette County. The house in which it was kept stood on Tibbett's farm, in the south part of the town. The building was made of logs, and without a floor, except the bare earth, with rude seats and no desks. Owing to sickness among the pupils the school was broken up before the expiration of the term. This school, although the first in the county, was not the first public school. With the organization of the county, J. F. Newlon held the office of County Superintendent, by appointment of the Governor of the State. Immediately on entering upon the duties of the office he officially organized school districts in the east part of the county, numbered from one to twenty-five inclusive; some of which became disorganized from time to time, which upon re-organization disarranged the order of time in which the respective formations took place. The district in which Oswego is situated being the first organized, became No. 1, and in which the first public school was taught by Robert Elliott, at a salary of $50 per month. No school building had been erected, and a small frame house was rented, and a "frolic" was made to fit it up, or rather supply furniture suitable for the necessities of the school. Among the tools brought for the construction was a two-inch auger, with which holes were bored in the rough planks and legs supplied; the planks hitherto resting upon large stones. In this way seating was provided, and the school building furnished.

The second school taught in the county was in a little log house on Big Hill Creek, about midway between Cherryvale and Mound Valley, and was district No. 19, one of the twenty-five first established by Superintendent Newlon.

The organization of districts did not correspond with any regular territorial lines, but as a general rule, followed upon streams where the earliest settlements were made. In 1867, seventy-three children attended school, fifteen of whom attended subscription school, and fifty-eight in the public schools. In 1879, twelve years later, there were ninety-seven school districts, and a school population of 7,373, and in 1882, there were 105 organized districts, and a population of 8,661, having an enrollment of 7,062, and an average daily attendance of 4,045, under the instruction of 130 teachers. Thus is seen that in a period of three years following 1879, the gain in the school population was more than 1,000 in number.

County institutes were early begun for the training of teachers to greater efficiency in their work. The first effort made in this direction was in 1869, when Robert Elliott was County Superintendent. It was held in a small frame, now used as a carpenter shop, and was both an interesting and profitable session, with about thirty teachers present, and several valuable instructors. These institutes have since been held annually, and are liberally attended and supported.

The Labette County Agricultural Society was formed in 1871; J. M. Wood was elected president of the association, C. B. Woodford, secretary, and C. O. Perkins, treasurer. Shortly after the organization was perfected, the exhibition grounds, comprising twenty-two and a half acres, were procured. These grounds have been fitted up as the means would justify. They are enclosed by a tight board fence, and supplied with floral hall, amphitheatre and other necessary buildings, and contain an excellent speed ring. Annual fairs have been held since the society was organized, and creditable displays have been made. C. Montague is now president of the association; C. A. Wilkin, secretary, and I. W. Patrick, treasurer. Much interest is manifested in the enterprise, which serves materially in stimulating and promoting a more exalted idea of agriculture, both theoretical and practical.

The Labette County Historical Society was organized July 16, 1878, through the exertions of Nelson Case, W. A. Starr and R. M. Donley, who were designated, by a few of the oldest settlers, a committee to take the necessary preliminary steps. At the date of its formation, the society embraced only about a dozen members. The original officers were: Nelson Case, president; George Lisle, vice-president, both of Chetopa; J. S. Waters, of Oswego, secretary; M. W. Reynolds, of Parsons, corresponding secretary; C. M. Monroe, of Fairview, treasurer. The present officers are: Nelson Case, president; W. A. Starr, secretary; T. C. Cory, treasurer; Wesley Farrot, of Elm Grove, and B. W. Perkins, of Oswego, directors. The society was incorporated November 21, 1881. Among the early settlers interested in this society, may be named: A. T. Dickerman, who was a trader with the Indians, a resident of Fairview Township; M. M. Kingsbury, druggist, who came in 1865 or 1866, Oswego; C. C. Clover, John Clover, Bowman Altamont, the Hyatts, John Richardson, J. F. Hill, N. M. Purviance, J. D. Conderman, A. G. Drake and J. A. Gates. Stated meetings are held in the city of Oswego, Kan., on the first Wednesday of each regular term of the District Court, and special meetings at the call of the executive committee or vote of the society. Their rules are, of course, subject to change by proper methods.

PARSONS.

Parsons is located in the north part of Labette County, three miles from the Labette and Neosho county line. The site of Parsons is a plateau, slightly elevated above the valley of Labette Creek, a tributary of the Neosho River, on the east, and the valley of the Little Labette Creek on the west and south. Parsons is now a fine, prosperous city of nearly seven thousand inhabitants, regularly laid out, with wide streets, and a large number of substantial brick stores, banks, churches, manufactories, etc., and three railroads.

This city has been of exceedingly rapid growth. Twelve years ago its site and the surrounding country were occupied only by a few early settlers upon their claims. The Neosho Division of the Missouri Pacific Railroad was being pushed with all possible energy towards the Indian Territory, in order to gain the right of way through that Territory. Track laying on that division reached the present town site of Parsons, May 20, 1870, and was pushed forward at the rate of one mile a day. The building up of a town was determined upon by railroad gentlemen of high official position, and in the fall of that year, L. F. Olney, of Parkersville, Morris Co., Kan., the engineer who had been appointed to survey and plat the town, arrived upon the ground. A town company had already been formed, consisting of the following gentlemen: R. S. Stevens, Pres.; O. B. Gunn, H. D. Minck, A. D. Jaynes, J. R. Barrett and N. S. Goss. The town was named in honor of Levi Parsons, president of the Neosho Division of the M. P. R. R. Co.

An agent was appointed to purchase the claims in the immediate vicinity of the town site, which consists of 2,560 acres, and was owned at the time of purchase by the following persons: George W. Briggs, Abraham Cary, John Davis, H. L. Partridge, Henry Baker, Anson Kellogg, Angelina Baker, Joseph R. Simpson, Ed. R. Rall, H. Pearson, Abraham Fultz, Samuel Eaves, John Kendall, R. F. Caldwell, W. K. Hayes, Aaron Midkiff and George Wilson, most of whom owned a quarter section. As soon as it became known that a town was to be located here, people flocked in from all directions, living temporarily in wagons, tents, and hastily-built board houses. On the 8th of March, 1871, the Town Company's books were opened for the sale of lots, and on that day Abraham Carey purchased the first lot sold for $500. This lot was the one on the corner of Forest and Central avenues, now occupied by the Opera House. At this time the town had a population of several hundred. After a few small houses had been built, the town of Ladore, five miles to the northwest, in Neosho County, and containing at the time about one thousand inhabitants, was almost wholly moved to Parsons. Montana, a small town on the Neosho, about nine miles southeast, contributed a portion, as also did Labette, another small town, eight miles southeast, on the Missouri Pacific Railroad. Thus the growth of Parsons was marvelous from the first, and on the 25th of April, 1871, the town was made a city of the third class.

The lots owned by the Town Company were of two classes—business lots and residence lots, the former being 25x120 feet, the latter 50x150, and the price at which they have been sold has varied from $25 to $500. The company has refused to sell lots to speculators.

During the winter of 1870-71, a large number of business and professional men moved to Parsons and conducted their business or professions under difficulties and embarrassing inconveniences, with which their present stores and offices present striking contrasts, and it is difficult to say with exactness to whom belongs the credit of having been first upon the ground. But as near as can be ascertained, the business men came in about the following order: hardware, Mr. Perkins and Gibbert & Cary; grocery, Sipple Brothers and E. K. Currant, who also sold dry goods; stationery, Hays & Pearson; general merchandise, John W. Rhodus, M. Johnson, M. K. Brown and Ed. Foley, none of whom are now in business in Parsons; hotels, W. P. Squires, whose "hotel" consisted of a long row of tents and temporary board houses, and Jacob McLaughlin, whose original hotel building is now used as a livery stable. The first drug store was opened by Dr. T. L. Warren, in November, 1870, who was the first physician in Parsons. He was followed in regular order by Drs. G. E. Kennedy, A. L. Hutchison and G. W. Gabriel. The first lawyer was J. G. Parkhurst; second, E. E. Hastings; third, T. R. Thornton; fourth, T. C. Cory, who came in March, 1871, from Ladore, Neosho County, and is the only one of the four now practicing in Parsons; Willard Davis, afterwards Attorney General of the State, came to Parsons in May, and R. M. Donley, recently shot and killed in Texas, by C. M. Burgess, came here in June, 1871. There are now eleven practicing attorneys in Parsons.

The first school was taught in 1872 by Prof. Taylor, and the first sermon was preached by Rev. H. H. Cambern, in 1871, in a saloon, a whisky barrel being used as a desk or pulpit. Mr. Cambern was a Presbyterian.

The first marriage in Parsons was that of Thomas Deckery to Mary J. Kinnison, January 9, 1871; the first birth was that of Parsons Dana, son of W. W. and Nancy J. Dana, in 1871. A town lot was presented to him by R. S. Stevens.

Parsons was made a city of the third class April 25, 1871, without having been organized as a town. Willard Davis was the first Mayor, and the first Council consisted of J. I. Plato, Abraham Cary, W. W. Dana, J. W. Rhodus and Charles Watson. E. B. Stevens was elected Mayor in the fall of 1871; Angell Matthewson in the spring of 1874; George W. Gabriel, 1875; P. Y. Thomas, 1877; J. W. Thompson, 1879; George W. Gabriel, 1881. Parsons was made a city of the second class, February 25, 1873.

In the fall of 1880, through the enterprise of E. H. Edwards, the city was supplied with an Opera Hall. It is a large two-story brick building, the upper floor being fitted up and furnished as a hall, and the lower floor divided up and occupied as store rooms.

The city government has charitably provided and supports an appropriate cemetery for the repose of her dead. The cemetery grounds are large and tastefully laid off, and are ornamented in keeping with the monrnful solitudes of this city of the dead. Among the stones already marking the repose of the tomb are numerous large and costly monuments. The grounds comprise an area of twenty acres, and were procured from the Town Company, October, 1872.

Parsons now contains 12 hotels, 15 groceries, 24 blacksmiths, 13 general stores, 4 hardware stores, 5 agricultural implement dealers, 3 book stores, 3 boot and shoe stores, 3 furniture stores, 3 harness shops, 3 jewelers, four lumber yards, 8 millinery stores, 4 real estate and insurance agencies, 1 carriage shop, 3 drug stores, 3 livery stables, 5 meat markets, 6 grain dealers, and a population of about 6 500, 1,400 of whom were registered as voters in the fall of 1882.

This city has been generally known as the "Infant Wonder," on account of its rapid and permanent growth. Its streets are regularly laid off at right angles with each other, and many of them are macadamized, guttered and curbed, and bordered by flagged stone sidewalks, the flagging being found in inexhaustible quantities within a few miles of the city. Many of the business blocks are brick buildings, two or three stories in height, with iron fronts, stone trimmings and plate glass windows and doors. In the residence portions of the town there are a considerable number of commodious, tasteful and elegant dwellings, which lack only shade trees around them to be all that could be desired. This defect will in time be remedied in part; not wholly, however, perhaps, on account of the smallness of the lots, which on this account do not permit ideal ornamentation.

SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES.

The people of the city early availed themselves of every means and convenience for the education of the rising generation. No sooner had a sufficient number of children of school age been gathered into the town than a school was furnished for them to attend. The earliest effort in this direction was made in 1871. A school house, a frame structure, was erected, in which the first school was taught by E. H. Taylor. The influx of settlers and the increase of the population of the town was so rapid that it was not more than one year until the building already erected became inadequate to accommodate the increased number of pupils. Accordingly a large two-story brick building containing four rooms, was erected at a cost of $15,000, and stands in the east part of the city. In 1874, two years later, the cramped condition of the schools demanded still more room, to satisfy which another two-story brick building was erected, costing the same as the former, to which it is very similar in appearance and size and stands in the west part of the city. In 1880 necessity compelled the erection of another building. This one stands in the north part of the city and is a tastefully constructed two-story brick, containing five rooms, three school rooms and two recitation rooms, and although perhaps the largest and finest school building in the city, yet it cost only about $12,000 or less by $3,000 than either of the others. A school building for the accommodation of the colored children was erected recently and is a plain two-story frame building. The schools, numbering a population of 1,596 have been thoroughly graded, the departments and grades corresponding to the schools in other cities, and are under Lee Tomlin as superintendent; J. W. Iden and J. W. Richardson as principals; assisted by a corps of nine competent lady teachers as follows: Misses Helen G. Steele, Lina Diggs, Mary Grover, Elsie Abenchain, Phoebe Reynolds, Alice Wilson, Leta Gabriel, Alice Yarnell and Maude Kyser. The rapid increase of the school population is already beginning to crowd the capacious buildings now in use and will soon necessitate the erection of another building. The present officers of the school board are: William Mole, President; A. D. Arnett, Vice-President; A. H. Tyler, Clerk, and M. Johnson, Treasurer.

Rev. Mr. Cambern, of the Presbyterian Church, preached the first sermon in Parsons, in the spring of 1871, the services being conducted in Cary's building which stood where the Opera house now stands. Since then the spread and influence of religious teaching has kept pace with the progress of the town, the various denominations becoming organized as the respective numbers would permit.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in April, 1872. A small frame church house was built in which services were conducted until 1880, when a spacious brick edifice was erected. The congregation has flourished since its beginning, and now has a membership of 180, with Rev. H. W. Chaffee as pastor.

The Presbyterian Church was organized in February, 1871. Meetings were at first held in whatever place afforded accommodation. The foundation for a regular church building was begun in 1874, but the structure was not built, and what work had been done was afterward torn up with the view of enlargement. The building was erected in 1875, and is a one story frame. The membership is 185, and W. F. H. Keys is pastor.

The Congregational Church was organized July 12, 1873. The church building, a one-story brick, was erected during the same year. The congregation, numbering sixty members, is under charge of Rev. Mr. Hartley.

The Baptist Church became established in 1872. For some time they conducted worship in other churches and in halls, until in 1879, when the present church edifice was erected. It is a small one-story brick structure. The society has a membership of fifty-one, and is under the spiritual guidance of Rev. H. M. Carr.

The Christian Church was organized in 1873. The present membership is sixty, under charge of Rev. Asa Curl. This body also held its meetings in other churches until the erection of a regular church building in 1879, which is a one-story frame.

St. John's Memorial Protestant Episcopal Church was organized in 1873, through the efforts of Angell Matthewson. During the following year a church edifice was erected—a one-story brick building. Rev. W. T. Bowen is the present pastor, and the congregation has a membership of sixty.

The United Brethren became regularly organized as a church body in February, 1875. They for some time depended on the courtesy and christian charity of other churches for a place of worship, until the Methodists built their new one, when these Brethren procured the old frame one, in which they now worship. The society has a membership of forty-one, with Rev. Foley as pastor.

The Catholic Church was established in 1872. The present membership is 350 under the charge of P. J. Roos, priest. A building has been erected and is a substantial structure. During the fall and winter of 1881 this body established a school for the education of children belonging to that church, Protestant children being also admitted. Four teachers, or sisters, are employed in the school, and the whole is managed by Father Roos. A neat frame building was erected for the accommodation of the school, which will be superseded by a larger and more expensive one when the necessities demand it.

The African Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in November, 1876, and a Baptist organization was effected by the colored people, the latter having erected a house of worship in 1882, a plain one-story frame building.

THE PRESS AND SOCIETIES.

A flourishing newspaper press is the great indicator of the intelligence of any community. Where these flourish there is a reading public and a consequently intelligent one. Thus it is in the city of Parsons, with a wide and liberal patronage, her journals of news and intelligence prosper. There are at present three live newspapers published in the city, two of which being long established enjoy wide circulation, and the third, though but recently started, meets with such encouragement as is conducive to its success, and as only intelligent and reading people bestow.

The Sun, the longest established of all the papers now published in the city, began its career in June 1871, through the enterprise of N. W. Reynolds and L. J. Perry. For several years it was subject to an almost annual change of proprietorship, until in 1878, when it was purchased by H. H. Lusk who has since been engaged in its publication, as a weekly news journal. It is a six column folio, Republican in politics, and has a circulation of 1,400 copies. The addition of a daily paper was made in September, 1880. It is a five column folio, and has a circulation of 1,200 copies. It is a morning paper, and the only one receiving the Associated Press dispatches

The Eclipse was started in April, 1874, by J. B. Lamb, as a weekly paper, which has enjoyed gratifying success, now having a subscription list of 1,000, and is an eight column folio. The additional publication of a daily was begun in April, 1881, at which time also, A. C. Lamb, son of the proprietor, became interested as partner in the concern. The circulation of the daily is 350 copies

The Leader was established by G. F. Kimball, as a Sunday morning paper, in October, 1882, the first issue being made on Sunday, October 29. Being but recently begun the enterprise has, as yet, made but little history, but judging from the ability and experience of its founder, as a newspaper man, and the encouragement bestowed by the people of the city upon undertakings of this kind, it is safe to predict for it a prominent and lasting standing among the journals of the city.

Perhaps nowhere is social and fraternal fellowship so highly cultivated and general as in the city of Parsons as shown by her numerous organizations of this kind. All the various secret, social and mutual benefit organizations are here represented, with large and full membership.

Parsons Lodge, No. 117, A., F. & A. M., was instituted October 17, 1872, and was the second secret organization in the place. It now has a membership of 160, with S. B. Newton, worshipful master, and A. C. Peck, secretary

Forest Park Association.—A stock company known as the Forest Park Association of Parsons, was organized and chartered December 10, 1881. The capital stock of $5,000 is divided into fifty shares of $100 each, all of which have been taken. A tract of eighteen acres of land lying to the southeast of the city, and on the west bank of Labette River was purchased and is being fitted up and beautified with walks, drives, lakelets, fountains, statuary, rustic bridges, etc. This Association is made up from the wealthiest and most enterprising men of the city, and the enterprise they have undertaken is indeed praiseworthy and meets the hearty approval of the pleasure loving public. W. H. Morris is President of the Association; John Dean, Vice President, and S. W. Kniffin, Secretary.

A Library Association, under the auspices of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, was formed in 1880, the object being to establish a public reading room. Several efforts of the kind had previously been made, but they met with failure. During the year 1881 Mrs. Augustus Wilson visited the Eastern cities, where she procured aid through the donation of money and books, toward the enterprise. The erection of a large library building began in the spring of 1882, and is a most beautiful brick structure one hundred feet long by sixty feet wide, and three stories high. It is handsomely finished on the exterior, and the interior is elegantly fitted up for library purposes. The library at present contains about 2,000 volumes of miscellaneous books. Mrs. Wilson is president of the association and Mrs. Kate Grimes, secretary.

The Parsons Fair and Driving Park Association was established in 1880, as a stock company, with a capital of $20,000, and is composed of the wealthiest citizens of the place. The grounds of forty-six acres, were procured and fitted up for the purposes desired, in which a large speed ring is included, and such other conveniences as help to render attendance on such places enjoyable.

BUSINESS AND MANUFACTURES.

Parsons, among her institutions, has three banking houses, each of which does a flourishing business. They are as follows:

The First National Bank of Parsons was established and chartered March 29, 1872, by a banking company of which A. D. Jaynes was president, Angell Matthewson, cashier, and R. S. Stevens, A. D. Jaynes, O. B. Greene, Samuel Fry, W. G. Melville, E. B. Stevens, and M. N. Reynolds, were directors. The present officers of the bank are R. S. Stevens, president; Lee Clark, vice-president and cashier, and E. B. Stevens, assistant cashier. The banking capital is $50,000, with a reserve of $4,500, and deposits averaging $110,000.

Parsons Commercial Bank was first started in May, 1874, as the Parsons Savings Bank by a stock company composed of about fifteen members, and was duly incorporated. In 1878 it was changed from a savings bank to its present situation. A. Wilson was first president, and Joshua Hill, cashier. The institution carries on business on a capital of $50,000, and a reserve of $2,000. The deposits amount to $100,000. At present J. Hill is president; A. Wilson, vice-president, and G. W. Hawk, cashier, who is also chief manager of the concern.

The City Bank of Angell Matthewson & Co., was established October 1, 1880, as a private institution, by Angell Matthewson, Merrick Noyes, and F. H. Snyder, who is cashier. The capital is $60,000, with an average of deposits amounting to $45,000.

Each of these institutions has erected a large brick banking house, which is tastefully fitted up for the business.

The Osage Coal and Mining Company was organized in May, 1871, by R. S. Stevens and a number of Eastern parties. The company was formed for the purpose of mining and dealing in coal, and has a capital stock of $500,000. Mines now being operated are in the Indian Territory, Missouri and Kansas, the product being from fifty to sixty car loads per day.

The Telephone Exchange was established in Parsons, in July, 1882, by the Merchants' Telephone and Telegraph Company, located at Kansas City, Mo., the business at Parsons being under the management of J. C. Stimmell. There is also a line connecting with the city of Oswego.

As a manufacturing city, Parsons holds no mean place. The principal establishments of this kind are the shops of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad Company, located and built here in 1872. Of these there is a semi-circular round-house, containing stalls for fourteen engines, and the machine shop proper, which measures 100x300 feet, with an engine house 40x50 feet. These buildings are massive stone structures, costing more than a quarter of a million dollars, and contain machinery valued at $60,000. A new foundry was erected in 1882 taking the place of the old frame one. It is a substantial brick building, 60x166 feet, costing about $10,000. The blacksmith shop is a frame building, 50x120 feet. In all the departments of these shops there is employed an average force of 210 men the year round, to whom is paid annually as wages $180,000. Besides these the Bridge Department for over 800 miles of road, employing about thirty men, is also located at this place.

The Parsons Foundry and Machine Shops were established in 1879, by Robert Crichton, and are employed in the manufacture of all sorts of machinery to order, and in doing all sorts of job and repair work, the foundry being used in making mouldings of all sorts.

The National Flour Mill and Elevator was brought to Parsons from Osage Mission by H. H. Brown and H. D. Mirick, in 1879, and was fitted up by Angell Matthewson. It is a steam mill with five run of buhrs, and has a capacity for grinding 300 bushels of wheat per day. The building is a three-story frame, to which is attached a large frame elevator. The business is now in the hands of H. H. Brown & Co.

A sash and door factory was built in the summer of 1882, by D. P. Deprey and G. L. Ellis. The building is a large two-story brick, the lower story being fitted up with a full line of machinery for the manufacture of all sorts of carpenters' house-furnishing, finishing and ornamental goods.

The Stone Flouring Mill and Elevator was built in 1880, by Mr. Hoke. It is operated by steam-power, and contains three run of buhrs. The building is a large three-story stone structure.

The Foster Automatic Windmill Manufactory was started in June, 1882, by John Keys and William Alexander. The shop is operated in making windmills, as ordered, and also in doing all sorts of wagon and carriage work, and blacksmithing. The building is a one-story brick, measuring 40x60 feet in dimensions.

Besides these establishments are several smaller ones, such as wagon and carriage shops, engaged in the manufacture of these vehicles on a limited scale, etc.

C. C. Keyser operates a plow factory, in the manufacture of his patent breaking plow, which, it is said, possesses points of superiority over any other plows of the kind, and its manufacture bids fair to develop into a large and lucrative enterprise.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

MAJOR SOLON B. ABBOTT, oldest son of Elam and Roxey Ellison Abbott, and grandson of Daniel Abbott, a soldier of the War of the Revolution and of 1812, was born December 4, 1833, in the town of Stockbridge, Vt. After receiving an academic education in Newbury, Vt., he learned the trade of carpenter, which he supplemented with that of architect, studying the latter with Downing & Vaux, at Newburgh, on the Hudson. In May, 1853, he sailed from New York for California, where he had decided to try his fortune. After remaining about five months in Central America, during the fillibustering career of Gen. Walker, he sailed from San Juan October, 1853, and arrived at San Francisco November 23d. He remained two years in Southern and Middle California, employed in contracting and mining and was for a time a member of the Vigilance Committee in San Francisco. After building a large steam mill and sash and door factory at Sacramento, he went to Knight's Ferry, on the Stanislaus River, where he built the stone banking house of Shell & Co., and was subsequently appointed Deputy Sheriff, and then Sheriff of the county, in which capacity he had several very desperate encounters with the robbers and bandits that infested the country at that time. For capturing three robbers that had been plundering Wells, Fargo & Co.'s express, he received a reward of $3,000 in gold. His term as Sheriff expired in 1858, and he then engaged successively in the Frazier River gold expedition and Col. Stepoe's expedition against the Indians, being promoted after the battle of Ball's Bluff to Major of the Third California Volunteer Infantry. He then located in Victoria, Vancouver's Island, where he carried on the business of architect and builder, and received marked honors at the hands of the English government. In 1862 he went into Seattle, Washington Territory, where he designed and built the University and many of the principal buildings; being also employed on coast and harbor improvements. In 1868 he built the first large sawmill on the Columbus River, and was one-third owner at St. Helens, Oregon, and thence returned to San Francisco and established the extensive wholesale lumber yard of Flatt & Abbott. In 1870 he sold his interest in the lumber business and went to Cementville, on the Columbia River, in Washington Territory, and the following year erected the Cementville mills, of which he was architect and superintendent. In 1872, in consequence of impaired health, he sold his property on the Pacific coast, and after an absence of twenty years, returned to the East. He came to Kansas, and after visiting his old home was appointed Land and Emigrant Agent of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad, for the New England States. In 1874 he resigned that position and located in Parsons, Kas., where he now resides. Since his residence in Parsons he has been active in building up the business of the town. He assisted in establishing the Parsons' Savings Bank, of which he was a director and vice president. He made the plans for the first iron corniced brick building which was erected in the village; built the Savings Bank building, introduced the first omnibus, and has cultivated and improved one of the best farms in Labette County. He is the owner of the Abbott House, which he conducted until June 13, 1881, and now rents, and is one of the Directors of the Chieftain Lead & Zinc Mining Co. He was appointed Deputy United States Marshall in 1874, elected Sheriff in 1875, and has recently been appointed Superintendent of bridges and buildings for the Kansas & Topeka Railroad. After being appointed Superintendent of Depots and Bridges of the Kansas & Topeka Railroad, he resigned to accept the designing and superintending of the fine wholesale building for Messrs. Hobart & May, of Springfield, Mo. Mr. Abbott was married February 6, 1861, to Lenora Harmon, who died in 1871, leaving two sons and one daughter. His present wife was Mrs. Laura E. He was one of the School Directors of his district in Osage Township during the entire period of his residence there, and for two years was President of the Osage Township Sunday School Association. Living near the "Bender" place, which had been the scene of many atrocious murders, mysterious disappearances and suspicious circumstances attending the movements of any one in the neighborhood were likely to be attended with summary if not merited punishment of any one connected therewith. Allusion to one particular can illustrate the feeling which existed in that section. One Hank Forrest had a difficulty with Charley Buckles, at the house of the father-in-law of Forrest. Immediately after the trouble between the young men Buckles disappeared, and Forrest was arrested for his murder, and narrowly escaped conviction, only three members of the jury being opposed thereto. Although the body of Buckles had not been discovered, Mr. Bayley became satisfied from the statements of the various parties who were present when the quarrel between the parties occurred, that Buckles was alive, and he was fearless enough to stand alone and declare his opinions when public sentiment was universally against him. And not until Buckles appeared alive and well did people conclude that Mr. B. was entirely sane and sincere in his declarations that injustice would be done if Forrest and his father-in-law were severely dealt with as indicated by the prevailing sentiment. Mr. B. is a member of the A. F. and A. M., K. of H., K. and L. of Honor, and Antietam Post No. 64, G. A. R. and of the Labette County Historical Society. W. L. BARTLETT, of the firm of Dean & Bartlett, dealers in general merchandise, was born in Swanton, Franklin Co., Vt., May 12, 1850, resided there most of the time until 1872, when he went to Boston, where he was engaged in the grocery and provision trade until he came to Parsons, Kan., in September, 1874. He was manager of the Parsons dry goods house of G. Y. Smith, of Kansas City until January 1, 1880, when the present firm of Dean & Bartlett was formed. He is a member of the A. F. and A. M. Blue Lodge and Commandery, and of the K. of P. Mr. B was married at Hannibal, Mo., in the spring of 1880, to Lucy Shellabarger. They have two children, John L. and a daugter aged six months.

SAUNDERS ARMSTRONG BIGGS was born in the city of New York, December 14, 1841, and was reared and educated there. In April, 1861, he enlisted in the Seventy-first New York Regiment; served three months, the term of enlistment, in that regiment, then entered the Twelfth New York Heavy Artillery as First Lieutenant, and served as such for about fifteen months. Receiving a sunstroke, he was disabled so as to be unfitted for duty, and he therefore resigned. Returning to New York, he became associated with his father, under the firm name of Isaac A. Biggs & Son, real estate dealers and negotiators of all kinds of reliable securities doing a general brokerage business, at the corner of Broadway and Fulton street. He remained with his father until 1876, when, on account of ill health, he came West, hoping to find a climate which would prove beneficial to his health. In July, 1876, he located at Parsons, and his failing health soon became very much improved, and he has led an active business life ever since. For over a year he was a member of the firm of Angell Matthewson & Co., in the real estate business, being associated with Angell Matthewson and Merritt Noyes, from July, 1876, to August, 1877. Since then he has been engaged in real estate operations, principally on his own account, although he has always acted for Angell Matthewson & Co., in examining their loans, looking after the details of the loan department of their business, etc. For three years he was in partnership with A. J. Cary, in mercantile business. He is a member of A., F. & A. M., and Episcopal Church, being still connected with the church of his childhood, St. John Chapel, N. Y. He was married, at Fort Plain, Montgomery Co., N. Y., December 11, 1867, to Estella L. Nellis, a native of that place, her parents being among the pioneers of Fort Plain. Mr. Biggs' father, Isaac A. Biggs, was born at Patchogue, L. I. He is now engaged in real estate and loan business. Mother, Harriet A. (Nellis) Biggs, was born at Johnstown, Fulton, Co., N. Y. Both parents still reside in New York.

LOUIS GRANT BIGWOOD, hardware merchant, is a native of Quincy, Adams Co., Ill., born January 27, 1845. Being too young to get into the service when the War of the Rebellion broke out, he went to Indiana, where his age was not known, and, October 23, 1861, he enlisted, as "Louis Grant," in Company F, Twentieth Indiana Volunteers. He was wounded at Charles City Cross-roads, in Virginia, June 30, 1862, and taken prisoner at that time. Two months later, he was exchanged and removed to Bellevue Hospital, New York City, remaining there until January, 1863, then rejoined his regiment and continued with it until the close of the war. He came to Parsons in February, 1880. For one year he was associated with George Rattiff, in the hardware business; since then, with his present partner, O. W. Rowland. *HON. WILLARD DAVIS is a native of Kentucky, having been born in Madison County, of that State, on the 26th day of January, 1837. His father, James Davis, was a Kentucky farmer of Welsh descent. His mother was of German parentage. Her father, George Teater, who was of German birth, immigrated to Kentucky in early youth, from the State of New York, and was also, by occupation, a farmer. James Davis died when the subject of this sketch was only two weeks old, leaving a large family—Willard being the youngest of eight children—to the care of a widowed mother, whose resources were limited. The individual history of the members of families so early in youth, bereft of their chief natural supporter and protector, never was, never can be written. The trials, sufferings, hopes, labors, ambitions, disappointments, which enter into the early life and experience of every boy of true spirit and courage can never be portrayed by the pencil of the artist or the pen of biographer. In this respect, young Willard Davis, has, like all others, an unwritten history. Orphaned in early infancy, which orphanage, two years afterwards, was relieved or modified by his introduction to a step-father, it will require but a limited exercise of the imagination to here supply the "missing link" of life. Knowing naught, we would not speak unjustly—it is sufficient in this respect, to say that, in the feeble age of youth, we find Willard Davis in the burning sun of a Kentucky landscape, hoe in hand, laboring for his bread, and toiling for his raiment. And such had been his success in the youthful struggles to overcome the adverse tide of fortune, and to prepare himself for the realization of his higher ambitions, that, at the early age of sixteen he had become a teacher in the schools of his native district. From thence, alternate teacher and student, he plied his mind to his books until he was prepared to enter upon a regular collegiate course, when he entered the Missouri University, where he completed his collegiate education in a three years course. Returning to Kentucky, having selected the profession of law, as his "way of life," he resumed his occupation as a teacher, applying himself assiduously to the study of the law, attended and graduated at the Lexington law school, and was admitted to practice in the courts of Kentucky. Immediately after his admission to the bar, he was nominated by the "opposition" for the office of County Attorney. Parties in the county were about equally divided. The Democratic candidate was a man of greater age, and greater experience, strongly backed by wealthy connections. The canvass was vigorous and animated, but Mr. Davis' victory was complete—being elected over his Democratic opponent by a majority of one hundred and ninety-five votes. It was while yet engaged in the discharge of the duties of this his first official position, in the spring of 1861, when the country was shocked by the bombardment and fall of Fort Sumter. Notwithstanding Willard Davis was a native of Kentucky, when the integrity of his country was assailed, and her flag dishonored, his intuitive love of liberty, his convictions of right, his ardent patriotism, at once pronounced the judgment of Willard Davis' conscience—"The Union, now and forever, one and inseparable." Without hesitation, with the Revolutionary fathers, he calmly and fearlessly placed upon the "altar of his country," his life, his fortune, and his sacred honor. By his voice and acts he opposed the secession of Kentucky from the Union. With a Lieutenant's commission he entered the service of his country, in the Thirty-first Kentucky Volunteer Infantry. In the battle of Richmond, the Union forces were defeated, and a large number taken prisoners, by the combined forces of Generals Kirby Smith and John Morgan. Lieut. Davis, with a few others, made his escape through the rebel lines to Louisville, Ky., one hundred and fifty miles distant where he immediately joined the command of Gen. Jefferson C. Davis, and took an active part in preparing for the defense of that city against Gen. Bragg, who, with a large force, was at that time, threatening Louisville from the South. After the battle of Perryville, Lieut. Davis was compelled to retire from the army, because of failing health. A short time after his retirement from the military, he found employment in the civil departments of the Government. On the 14th day of March, 1863, President Lincoln commisioned Mr. Davis Collector of Internal Revenue, for the Second Collection District of the State of Kentucky. This District embraced more than half the State, and adjacent to the borders of Virginia and Tennessee. The duties of this office were discharged by Mr. Davis with zeal and success, under circumstances of great peril, and personal danger, large portions of the District being constantly over-run by guerrilla bands, and divisions of the Confederate army. On one occasion, being surrounded by the forces of the notorious guerrilla, Champ Ferguson, he was compelled, in order to escape capture, to swim the Cumberland river. Subsequently he was successively commissioned Collector of the Fifth and Seventh Collection Districts of the State of Kentucky. It was whilst in the successful and satisfactory discharge of the duties of the Seventh (Ashland) District, Mr. Davis received from the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McCulloch, his circular letter, in substance, exacting a pledge from Mr. Davis to support the "policy" of the President, Andrew Johnson. This Mr. Davis firmly but courteously declined, and consequently, on the first day of September, 1866, received his letter of dismissal from the public service. Upon this abrupt termination of his official labors, Mr. Davis resumed the practice of his chosen profession, and was immediately employed at a liberal salary, by the directors of the Cincinnati & Chattanooga Railway Company as their attorney in Kentucky. It is needless to say that, mingled with his professional labors, Mr. Davis embraced all collateral opportunities to impress on the Kentucky Bourbons his Stalwart Republican principles. In the summer of 1867, he was called upon by a committe of colored soldiers to deliver their Fourth of July oration. He at once accepted the invitation, against the protestations and entreaties of many personal friends in both parties, who were apprehensive of his personal safety if he should attempt to carry on the program of the colored soldiery. He chose for his theme, "Colored Suffrage." At that time, no white man in the State of Kentucky had had the temerity to promulgate, in a public speech, a declaration in favor of this great right. But, without this occasion and its eloquent utterances, Mr. Davis' life and character could never have been understood by the world, and never would have been appreciated by the thousands of the good and the true of this land who have read, and will read, the words of heroic eloquence uttered in his Lexington speech, on the 4th of July, 1867. It was the conception of a noble mind—the utterance of a great and good heart. J. B. McCullough, now editor of the Globe-Democrat, reported the speech in full for the Cincinnati Commercial, an original copy of which paper, containing the speech at length, the writer has now before him. In a speech of the gifted and eloquent Sumner, delivered in the Senate of the United States on the 13th of July, 1867, just one week after the delivery of Mr. Davis' speech in the city of Lexington, the learned Senator paid this merited and beautiful compliment to Mr. Willard Davis. Senator Sumner said: "Mr. President:—I say nothing about Massachusetts. Her history and her character will speak for her. I shall say something, however, of Kentucky. I have in my hands a newspaper, which I have received this morning, which contains the accounts of the celebration of the Fourth of July at Lexington. Is that not a town in Kentucky? I read, therefore, for what I say, only Kentucky authority. * * * * * Then comes another able speaker, Willard Davis, who makes an elaborate, able, compact, forcible address, and any Senator on this floor might court the ability to make such an address as is made by Mr. Willard Davis, of Kentucky."* And the great Senator proceeded to weave that speech—paragraph after paragraph, sentence after sentence, period after period—into his own great argument. Another correspondent, writing upon this subject, says: "I could have naught but admiration for a native of Kentucky, who, making Kansas the home of his adoption, among the privileged classes of that commonwealth, renowned for its statesmen, could 'beard the lion in his den,' and, perilling the safety of his hearthstone, proclaim the inalienable rights of a former enslaved race; and he feels it due to the age in which we live, to rescue from a possible oblivion such thrilling utterances from living public men, wherever found, and whoever they may be." Whilst in Kentucky, Mr. Davis was the same ardent, fearless Republican that he has been in the State of Kansas. He was a member of the State Republican Committee, and Chairman of the Republican Committee of the Seventh Congressional District of the State of Kentucky, which positions he resigned when he came to Kansas in the fall of 1870. Mr. Davis settled, when he first came to Kansas, at Neosho Falls, but had been there but a few months when he was employed as attorney for the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Company, to succeed Ruggles & Plumb, of Emporia—those eminent attorneys of Southern Kansas. Mr. Davis, in the winter of 1870-71, removed to the embryo city of Parsons, subsequently known as Milt. Reynolds' "Infant Wonder," and became the first Mayor of that "aspiring metropolis." In 1873 he resigned the position of attorney for the railway company, and entered upon the general practice of the law with flattering success. In the fall of 1874 he was elected to the office of County Attorney for Labette County, Kansas, which position he filled until his election as Attorney-General in 1876. As Attorney-General, Mr. Davis is now serving the last year of his second term. It would be circumscribing the judgment of the intelligent citizens of Kansas, merely to say that his administration of the legal department of the government had been conducted with ability. No, it would be drawing very mildly upon the archives of that department to say that the administration of Mr. Davis was characterized by marked ability and distinguished integrity. His opinions have been eagerly sought and highly esteemed by the legal profession, and by the people of the State. The records of that office show an immense amount of labor performed. His management of important State cases has been pre-eminent, saving to the State many thousands of dollars. In this as in all other official positions to which he has been called, he has summoned to his aid a ripe judgment, sustained by an intuitive sagacity, and a profound knowledge of human nature, drawn from the deep wells of ancient and modern literature and learning. Fully determined and convinced of the right, his will is of the iron mould, and his tenacity of purpose of the "Latheran order." In short, Mr. Davis, in his nature and being, is aggressive and pronounced. Forward and upward—higher and still higher—are all his aims, purposes and ambitions; whilst all are seasoned with the spirit of childlike candor, and the gentle tenderness of a pure benevolence. Mr. Davis is of tall and commanding appearance, and of graceful and lofty bearing; never forgetting that he was born in Kentucky. At this period of life he is of slender figure, his whole personnel witnessing to the observer that the intellectual has been, and now is, overworking the physical man. The blue-gray eye, the delicate texture of the skin, the thin coat of brown hair, the large brain, represented by a large and prominent forehead, with the fine chiseled features, upon which the "finger of time" has written out the life-services and character of Willard Davis in full—all declare him a true man. Religiously, Mr. Davis is a high-toned Christian, of broad and liberal views, having like the late President, General Garfield, been an active and consistent member of the "Disciples" Church since his early youth. Socially, Mr. Davis is an exemplary gentleman. Believing, with Lord Chesterfield, that Paul was the most perfect gentleman the world has ever produced, he, too, would cultivate and imitate the Christian graces. Mr. Davis, in the selection of his life companion, has there, also, evinced that purity of character and refinement of taste which has uniformly characterized all of his public or private conduct. The mother of Mr. Davis' three children was formerly Miss Addie Colman, one of Kentucky's purest and fairest daughters. A woman of talent, culture and attainments, the pride of her husband, and an accomplished conversationalist, she at once becomes the soul and the life of the social circle in which she moves. Mrs. Davis is ever ready, with all the strategy and zeal of her woman's nature, and with strong purpose and loving heart, to encourage, strengthen and support her husband in all the arduous duties of life. [Since Mr. Davis retired from the office of Attorney-General, in January, 1881, he has been engaged in the practice of the law, and mining extensively in Colorado.—EDITOR.]

REV. W. S. H. KEYES, D. D., pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Parsons, Labette Co., Kan., was born in Centre County, Pa., in 1826. By his father he comes of English, and by his mother of Scotch-Irish descent. Dr. Keyes passed his educational course mainly under the tutelage of his father, who was quite eminent as a scholar and teacher in his day. His early religious life was under the shadow of Methodistic training and influence, both father and mother being active members of this church, and it was their fond hope that their son would be a minister in that denomination. However, in the process of his studies for the ministry, his opinions on the subject of church polity, and certain doctrinal points so changed, that he was led to seek affiliation with a church more in harmony with his changed views and convictions of right; and it was about this time also, that the great Slavery agitation was stirring the heart of the nation and the church, and Dr. Keyes, with all the force of conviction, was led to embrace and champion the abolition side of the question, and this fact determined his steps of church relationship. The "United Brethren in Christ" was an abolition church, as well as anti-Episcopal, being Republican in its form of government, and in doctrine well in harmony with the theological views of the Doctor. He therefore entered the ministry in this church at the early age of eighteen, where he remained and ranked among their most eminent ministers for thirty-three years. During this time he received recognition of his scholarship and theological eminence by the conferring of the degrees of "Master of Arts" and "Doctor of Divinity" by Westfield College, Illinois, and Lebanon Valley College, Pennsylvania; in the latter he held for some time the chair of Mental and Moral Science, in connection with a pastoral relation to a church in Lebanon City, Pa. His last work in the United Brethren Church was that of General Centenary Agent, a work looking to the raising of funds for educational, missionary and other benevolent enterprises. While engaged in this work, the want of large intense church-life, on the part of those who should have been most interested in the great claims coming before them in his agency, so dissatisfied him with the prospective future of this church, that he resigned the work, and for the time being gave himself up to the lecture field, under the auspices of the New York National Lecture Bureau. Shortly after this he dissolved his relation with the United Brethren Church, and united with the Presbyterian, entering its ministry in the North Cumberland Presbytery, Pa. After this consummation he received a number of calls to the pastoral relation from different churches, accepting that of the First Presbyterian Church of Parsons, upon which he entered November 10, 1878, where his ministry has been marked with singular and continued interest and prosperity. As a pastor, Dr. Keyes has always been eminently popular and successful. Socially he is affable, and exceedingly well liked. In the pulpit he is fearless, and on the rostrum eloquent. His devotion to principle, his acceptance of what is right, and his bold utterance of the truth, as he is given to know and understand right and truth, make him one of the most pronounced and noticeable of public men in Kansas. His power of oratory is a distinguishing gift. Upon many occasions, in the lecture field and in the sacred desk, he has manifested a rare bravery in denouncing error. The family of Dr. Keyes consists of wife, son and daughter, all of whom are Pennsylvanians by birth.
